I. Summary

In the Annual Report for last year, I indicated that I planned to devote the 1986-87 report to a review of the preceding decade and attempt to provide an historical perspective to this period. It is an appropriate time to undertake this review, for on October 14, 1986 I marked my tenth anniversary as Dean of the School of Law. Counting my service as Acting Dean in 1972 through 1974, I have served this Law School as administrative head for thirteen years, a span of time characterized by much change and development in American legal education.

This past year was started with a two-prong purpose: first, to consolidate the gains made over this thirteen-year period, and, secondly, to meet the remaining goals which were set into motion in earlier years. I will devote a considerable portion of this summary to commenting on the theme of "institutional effectiveness" as called for in the memorandum asking for this year's unit reports for submission to the President of the University and to the Board of Regents. Institutional effectiveness is described by both a process and a set of measurements: the planning for and evaluation of expected outcomes. It is essential to start with a definition of expected results. In the case of the Law School's institutional effectiveness, we began with the questions: "What are we looking for when we say that we seek a plateau of excellence?" Secondly, "What will it take to achieve that plateau?" and thirdly, "What can we do to assure that the level of performance will not erode once we have achieved that plateau?"

These were the questions I set out to answer in 1977 after I had served my first full year as dean and had participated in a growth spurt during two previous years as acting dean. It was a critical year for planning: a national economic recession had us in the doldrums, and we were on the eve of a periodic re-accreditation review which called for introspection and projection at the same time. The final inspection report noted the progress that had been made in previous years by stating: "Georgia truly has the opportunity to become one of the jewels in the crown of American legal education, and it is already on the verge of it."

With the input of faculty committee chairmen, a document, "Blueprint for Progress" was prepared which became a planning manual from that day to the present. It is an appropriate time to take stock and note where the implementation of that blueprint has taken us.

"To become the very best that we are capable of being -- that is our mandate." This is the foreword of the document and the motto of the forward thrust. The quest for excellence which began at the University of Georgia School of Law in the mid-1960's was unfinished, but not unattainable, in 1977. A strategy for the years ahead focused on building strength in each of the "four pillars" of legal education: student body quality, faculty competence, library resources and physical plant facilities.

As to the measurement of a quality student body, one is reminded of the adage that "people vote with their feet." Carl Sanders spoke the words that became the Law School's statement of purpose: "The University of Georgia School of Law is . . . to be one such excellence that no citizen of Georgia need ever leave his state because a superior legal education is available elsewhere." Fortunately, the state's best and brightest law applicants have set their sights on Athens. In the 1984-85 test year, only 334 Georgians scored in the 34 to 48 range on the Law School Admissions Test. This limited pool was recruited heavily by a number of law schools both in and out-of-state. Seventy per cent of the 334 applied for admission to this law school. While the national trends of the 1980's are clearly marked by a decline in demand for legal education, the Georgia Law School has held steady and even increased in the number of applications from 1984 to 1986. Recruitment of students was not considered to be a high priority when I was named acting dean in 1972. At that time, the applications were at an all-time high of 1687. Many were veterans returning from the Vietnam War to take advantage of veterans' educational benefits. The School could afford to be selective because the applicant pool was plentiful. With each passing year the credentials of the student body became more and more impressive . . . a 613 average score on the LSAT in 1972 to a 650 in 1981 and then a 38 when the testing was converted to a two-digit scale. The 38 score placed us in the 84th percentile nationally among all law schools, and was maintained as a average score for four straight years. Likewise the undergraduate grade point average rose from 3.12 in 1972 to a high of 3.54 in the fall of 1981, and for the last six years it has hovered at 3.3.

It cannot be taken for granted that heavily-recruited students will automatically chose the advantages of studying in Athens and paying a relatively low tuition when other schools offer substantial scholarships. Therefore, one of the strongest thrusts of the "Blueprint for Progress" was for private endowment to build a reserve of scholarship money to attract top achievers. Strong private giving support from our alumni and friends prompted a 250 percent rise in annual scholarship grants since 1976 . . . from 115,000 to 400,000 this year.

In recognition of student body excellence, the Georgia Law School sought to become a member of the prestigious Order of the Coif in January, 1976. That application was still pending in the national executive committee when I became dean in October of that year. It became a matter of assembling the facts about the school and overriding a concern that the program was rudderless because of the sudden resignation of a dean who had served 18 months and then left to return to the University of Virginia.

After we submitted a renewed application . . . a comprehensive document which outlined substantial progress and achievement in all vital areas, the executive committee recommended approval to the member schools and put the matter out for a vote. The executive secretary of the Order of the Coif told me that our application received more endorsements than any other applicant school in the history of the organization.

Admittance to Coif membership is just one of many indicators of quality improvement. Another is the scholarly productivity of faculty. The University of Georgia ranked 24th among 174 law schools in a national comparative study of scholarly activity of law faculties in 1983. The study was a 54-month tally of articles and pages appearing in 23 of the most highly respected and competitive law journals. The University of Georgia was one of only six schools among the top 25 in the survey whose own journals were not included in the study. This was particularly impressive because most of the faculty members at other schools publish heavily in their own "in-house" journals. The survey reported on Georgia faculty writings which are in addition to those that appear in the Georgia Law Review and Journal. This is one of the central ingredients of a first class university, a faculty which writes and reflects upon the issues of his or her field and contributes research pieces in periodicals which are extensively cited and are highly selective in the manuscripts they accept for publication.

These faculty members are expected to excell in the classroom as well. A major change in the last decade has been the lowering of the student-faculty ratio. In 1977 the ratio stood at 28:1 with a student body of 619 and a faculty of 22. It was a struggle to keep basic classes to a reasonable size and the number of seminar offerings was severely limited because the teaching loads were already heavy. Also, the School was ready to implement a "writing requirement" for graduation in which each student would prepare a substantial piece of written research, but there was insufficient faculty to read, evaluate, and assist students in revising their papers. The "Blueprint for Progress" called for an increase in the number of faculty positions and a plan was proposed for doing it. Again our alumni and friends who make decisions on corporate and foundation giving were called upon for endowment money for chaired positions. There were two named professorships in 1972. This year we reached the level of 21 special professorships. The salaries of these professorships is supplemented with approximately $488,000 in annual income from invested accounts.

Private money was raised not only for the purpose of attracting scholars and teachers to this campus, but also for the added benefit of keeping exceptionally good teachers who periodically receive job offers elsewhere. The money saved in state salaries can be applied to new EFT's as the enrollment warrants. The student-faculty ratio is now 17:1 not counting clinicians or other non-tenure track professionals. This is well within the ABA-AALS guidelines.

A major recruiting tool for new faculty, and a major resource to draw upon for the state's lawyers, is the law library. If it has a comprehensive and current collection in the developing areas of the law, then it serves the needs of both the scholar and practitioner. The students need it as a learning laboratory with ample copies of assignment materials and references, and plenty of staff assistance to guide them in the early stages of their research.

One of the high points of my first year as acting dean was to preside over a ceremony marking the entry of the University of Georgia Law Library into the ranks of the top 20 law school libraries in the United States. We "broke" into the top circle with the acquisition of our 200,000th volume. This couldn't have been done without the commitment of people like former Dean Lindsey Cowen and former Governor Carl Sanders and Board of Regents chairman James Dunlap in the mid-1960's.

Our challenge with the Law Library was to keep this special enrichment status from eroding. While the collection was assembled quickly, it was done with sound advice. The collection of Anglo-American law is well-respected for its depth and it is in tune with the teaching resources needed in this area. Of particular emphasis in the past 20 years has been the collection of materials in comparative, foreign, and international law. The Georgia Law Library is truly the "library of last resort" in this region, for our public service librarians answer a high volume of requests for specialty materials.

Reaching the state of excellence was expensive, and remaining there will be also. Because of inflation and the mounting demand for serials and continuations which generate renewal costs each year, the collection is now slipping from its once proud ranking of 20th in the nation. We have been holding at 23rd place only through the generosity of the President's Office in allocating mid-year emergency funds to allow continued purchasing of needed serials and texts which reflect the ever-changing nature of the law.

The Law School has been designated as a repository for legal documents of the European Economic Community. Our library is the only library in the Southeast to be chosen to receive the documents, which relate to cases, legislation, parliamentary debates and special studies conducted by the EEC. A new development for 1986-87 is the movement toward automation of all major functions of the library. We are seeking funding from a private foundation to implement this changeover which carries a $750,000 price tag. There have been computer-assisted research facilities in the library since 1978 with the introduction of LEXIS and Westlaw.

An expanding library collection requires space to house its volumes, and the need for additional space existed long before the Library Annex was dedicated in 1981. The completion of the library annex project produced a special sense of satisfaction, since it was the first of two planned steps to make the law school truly a law center as recommended in the 1978 accreditation report. Aside from providing office and study space as well as shelving for the library, the annex provides the two student journals some of the most attractive and functional editorial offices in the country.

Right now our working environment needs expanded space for three vitally important functions: The Dean Rusk Center, the Institute of Continuing Judicial Education, and student co-curricular programs. This year $100,000 in planning money was approved by the 1987 Georgia General Assembly for for the design of a new building for these purposes. It is to be located on the south side of the present complex, and it is hoped that funding will be forthcoming in the next year to begin construction. The need is well-documented for this new building.

The Dean Rusk Center for International and Comparative Law opened in November, 1977 with a unique mission: to function as a service and research unit in solving problems which create a barrier to international cooperation, particularly in laws relating to foreign trade. Over the years, the Rusk Center researchers have drafted model legislation relating to export licensing; assembled comparative facts on trade between Canada, Mexico, and the U.S.; advised Georgia businessmen on export of agricultural products, opened dialogue with Japanese lawyers on trade restrictions; briefed the nation's governors on trade prospects with China, advised business leaders in Zimbabwe, and generally proved to be worthy of the promises that were made to Governor Busbee and others in 1977 when state funding was requested to begin the center.

The Institute of Continuing Judicial Education is likewise earning its reputation as an indispensable resource of training for Georgia's court personnel and a fountain of information and assistance for trial and administrative judges at all levels. Its beginnings date back to 1978 when it was envisioned as the "Judicial College" funded by the Administrative Office of the Courts. It was urged that the unit locate in Athens, where office facilities and administrative support could be provided. It later joined ICLE as part of the out-reach mission of the law school.

ICJE now sponsors 38 seminars attended by 1,792 registrants. Its counterpart, the Institute of Continuing legal Education, was founded in 1965 and has flourished as well, particularly under the provisions of a mandatory continuing education requirement enacted in 1984. ICLE is now headquartered at the Joseph Henry Lumpkin House, which was saved from deterioration by our fund-raising efforts in the early 1980's to generate restoration money.

One of the aspects of growth and development which has been a great source of pride to all of us is the student co-curricular programs. These programs add meaning to the notion that learning is essentially a self-help proposition.

The Georgia Law Review and the Georgia Journal of International and Comparative Law are excellent proving grounds for research and writing skills, and the Moot Court and Mock trial programs bring out the best in oral advocacy and brief preparation. Aside from making sure that these groups have faculty guidance and assistance when they seek it, the Dean's main task is to support them with the resources necessary to carry out their self-directed and self-motivated missions. That means underwriting travel and brief expenses for regional and national competition in the trial and appellate finals; or getting the best word-processing equipment for the editorial work of the journal and law review staffs. The results warrant the effort and expenditures. This past year the Moot Court program involved more than 140 students. In the six intercollegiate competitions, Georgia compiled an overall record of 23 wins and 11 losses. Georgia won three of the competitions and advanced to at least the final four in the other three competitions.

An endowment fund was created for the Georgia Journal this year. The fund began with a bequest which was directed to the Law School by an alumnus in Statesboro. Two former editors who now live in Washington, D.C. pledged President Club level gifts for the endowment and wrote to other board members urging their support.

The job market for law graduates survived the downturn in the national economy in the past decade and it has now returned to the healthy state where new graduates are being absorbed into the profession at a steady pace. The employment status of the Class of 1987 as of graduation on May 16 of this year was 73 per cent. The national placement rate at the time of graduation averages 60 per cent, so this class is 13 per cent higher than the national average. Also, 75 per cent of the second year class is employed in law-related jobs for the summer. There are 36 students who are splitting their summer between two employers. The law school is particularly proud of the judicial clerkships which our graduates accept each year. A true landmark was reached in 1980 when the first graduate of The Georgia Law School was selected for a clerkship with the U.S. Supreme Court. Benna Solomon, First Honor Graduate of the class of 1978, was named law clerk to Justice Byron White. Since then our graduates have been selected for clerkships with chief Justice Warren Burger in his last year on the court, and also Justice Thurgood Marshall.

We were fortunate to have two judges visit this year under the John A. Sibley Lecture program. Judge Abner Mikva visited in September and spoke on the appropriations power of Congress. Judge James Browning delivered the spring semester in April on the topic of judicial restraint. Antonia Handler Chayes, the Edith House lecturer for 1987, gave a talk on methods of alternative dispute resolution in March. We take special pride in our sponsorship, along with the Loridans Foundation of the Sibley Lecture series now in its 23rd year. Such notables as retired Chief Justice Earl Warren, U.S. Solicitor General Rex Lee, Judge Frank Johnson, Justice Harry Blackmun, Judge Ruth Ginsberg, and Professors H.L.A. Hart, Vern Countryman, Grant Gilmore, and Walter Gellhorn have visited here as Sibley lecturers.

A special event which will be long remembered is the 1987 Alumni Seminar for which the Law School provided the program. The topic was the bicentennial celebration of the U.S. Constitution with a focus on Georgia's contribution to constitutional history. The seminar featured a mock constitutional convention where "delegates" voted upon proposed amendments which have been suggested in recent years. Professor Milner Ball and I co-chaired the seminar, which attracted more than 200 registrants for the presentations and panel discussions. Keynote speakers included former Griffin Bell, Judge John Godbold, and Judge James Hill.

Law Day, 1987 was a memorable event for me personally because it was the occasion of the presentation of a portrait of me to the Law Library. I am truly grateful to the committee of alumni and friends who commissioned this portrait. I am also grateful to the Law School Association for awarding me a Special Distinguished Service Scroll.

The Honorable Elizabeth Dole, United States Secretary of Transportation, delivered the Law Day address to a large audience assembled on the Law School quadrangle.

Other Law Day speakers in the last decade have come from the U.S. Cabinet, as did Secretary Dole, or from other national policy-making positions. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance was the Law Day speaker in 1977. Other Law Day speakers have included Senator Ted Kennedy, Attorney General Griffin Bell, and U.N. Ambassador Andrew Young.

The 1977 Blueprint for Progress put forth a three year plan for funding the initiatives which would make a great law school. Those three years have come and gone, and the monetary goals have long been exceeded. The key factor which made that three-year private giving program possible was the school's first capital gifts campaign. The Talmadge-Law School Development campaign was a successful $3 million outreach which served as the prototype for the University's planning when it launched its Bicentennial Campaign in 1982. The years following the Talmadge campaign have not seen a letdown. 1985-86 was a banner year with $1,614,697 in new cash gifts . . . more than three times the amount given the previous year. Since July, 1986, new gifts, including annual fund gifts, have amounted to $762,838. This figure, along with pledge payments and newly announced pledges, totals $1,542,838 in new gifts committed in fiscal year 1986-87.

Announced just last month was the pledge of $500,000 from the Metropolitan Foundation of Atlanta to the John A. Sibley chair. This is added to a previous $250,000 gift which established the chair in January, 1986. The actual gift will be made in the fourth quarter of 1987, which will be sometime after October. At that time the net worth of the private endowment of the Law School, including gifts and pledges will total approximately $17,000,000.

Fund-raising to meet the needs of the Law School will always be, in my mind, the activity which gave me the greatest sense of accomplishment. I also value the unique and fortunate working relationship that I enjoyed with President Fred Davison. During my tenure, we developed a depth of understanding and the Law School received a level of support and encouragement never before equalled. This fact was noted in the 1985 re-accreditation report.

I was surprised recently when a study revealed that I had signed 2,645 J.D. degrees in the 13 years that I have served as dean. This is more than half the total number of living alumni of the Law School. It is particularly sobering when one realizes that this signature is their assurance that the school which they call their alma mater is fully accredited and that each time they look at that diploma on the office wall they can know that the value of the J.D. degree from the University of Georgia rises with each passing year of progress and advancement. My confidence in this assurance was reinforced by the following statement in the 1985 re-inspection report:

"The 1978 Site Evaluation Report described Georgia as a law school on the move. In the intervening seven years there is little room for doubt that Georgia has arrived. All of the major aspirational objectives stated in the Law School's 1977 self-study have been substantially achieved and higher goals adopted. The entire Law School community exudes the sweet smell of success. Like any complex and vital academic institution, small imperfections continue to surface and minor disagreements mar a generally tranquil scene, but the overall impression is that one of the oldest public law schools in the nation has finally achieved the level of excellence to which its founders committed themselves in 1859."

1. Academic Performance

Class of 1987

In August 1984, 192 students registered as members of the class of 1987. Nine students left for personal reasons during the first year and seven students were academically dismissed at the end of the first year. While both attrition numbers were unusually high, the first-year retention rate was 92 percent. In August, 1985, 171 second-year students registered. This number included five transfer students but not two students who subsequently returned to school Spring Semester 1986 and one who returned Summer 1986.

Joining the 174 returnees to the third-year class was one additional transfer student, a previous recipient of a Canadian law degree. Seven students were awarded the Juris Doctor degree in December, 1986, and 166 completed degree requirements in May, 1987. Two members of the class are scheduled to complete degree requirements in July, 1987 and an additional returning student is also scheduled to graduate. One class member is scheduled to complete in December, 1987. The overall retention rate for the Class of 1987 was 91 percent.

Class of 1988

The Class of 1988 registered 202 students in August, 1985. Matriculating were 201 students, and one student returned who had withdrawn from first-year classes the previous year. Six students withdrew during Fall Semester. A total of 191 students took Spring Semester 1986 examinations; five students were dismissed for academic reasons, and one student was academically suspended for one year. Two members did not return.

Joining the original remaining 184 persons in the class were two returning former members of the Class of 1987 and seven transfer students; thus the enrollment of the Class of 1988 totaled 192 students in Fall 1986. This places the current retention rate for the Class of 1988 at 96 percent.

Class of 1989

A total of 209 students registered as first-year students in August 1986. As the year before, one student returned who had been medically withdrawn the previous year. Six first-year students have withdrawn for medical or personal reasons. Although the actual retention rate cannot be determined until all grades are submitted and calculated, the preliminary retention rate for the Class of 1989 is 97 percent.

2. Bar Examination Results

Under the provisions of an act passed by the Georgia General Assembly in January 1974, third-year law students are eligible to take the Georgia Bar Examination after completing five semesters of law studies leading to the Juris Doctor degree.

The class of 1987, therefore, is comprised of December and May graduates who could pass the examination in July 1986, February 1987, or July 1987, and become members of the State Bar of Georgia during the year of graduation.

Of the 175 students with graduation dates of December 1986, May 1987, or July 1987, 136 took the July 1986 or February 1987 Bar examination. The July 1987 examination has not yet been administered.

The results are as follows:

a. Number of Georgia Class of 1987 students (or third-year students) who sat for Georgia Bar Examination in July 1986:	4
b. Number of Georgia law graduates who sat for Georgia Bar Examination in February 1987:	132

D. Clinical Experience

1. Legal Aid and Defender Society

During the past year, the Legal Aid Clinic has worked toward increasing funding from non-university government contracts in order to focus law school resources on teaching students. The result has been a strengthening of the academic value of the courses offered in the Legal Aid Clinic while hiring better quality personnel to staff the service functions of the clinic. The increase in funding secured from Clarke County, together with the new contract to provide public defender services in Municipal Court, enabled the Clinic to hire an experienced attorney to supervise the public defender services in our office. This has reduced the case load of the Director and Assistant Director considerably, allowing them to devote more time to the structure and content of the Legal Aid Course and Criminal Defense Clinic.

This year the classroom component of the Legal Aid course was increased to include a two-hour class session each week. These classes include lectures about the varied topics encountered by students as they conduct live client interviews throughout the semester. Topics range from substantive law topics to communication skills to problems in professional responsibility and ethics. Throughout the lectures, students are encouraged to ask questions and participate in discussion. Videotaped interviews were also added to the legal aid classroom component. Lawyers and students in the office assisted in preparing a series of tapes of various interviews. The tapes are played in class, with the action stopped at intervals where class discussion is appropriate. The method of presentation has allowed new students to see an actual interview performed and critiqued before they are called upon to interview a client themselves, resulting in a marked improvement in the quality of the students' interviews.

The number of hours each student is required to be in the Legal Aid Office has been increased. This has increased the continuity of student-client contact and reduced the number of students who traditionally perceived the course as "easy credit" and took it only for that reason. This year, for the first time in years, all students who wished to take Legal Aid were allowed to enroll in the course. Only those who are truly interested in the course presently enroll, which has obvious benefits toward the office work product and work attitude. Students who put more effort in the course always get more out of it. The increased requirements of the course assure that every student enrolled in Legal Aid will be proficient in interviewing and counseling skills at the close of the semester.

Criminal Defense Clinic is a new two-semester course which has replaced Criminal Trial Practice in the curriculum. The course is limited to a select group of fifteen third-year students who are certified to practice under the Law School Legal Aid Agency Act of 1967.

Unlike the old certified student program, the Criminal Defense Clinic is year long and graded. In the early weeks of the first semester, students are exposed to an intense training period in "night court". Class is held three hours a night, three times a week for the first month. Students are divided into two groups and perform on numerous cases, each designed to illustrate a particular problem which a trial lawyer might encounter in court. Exercises are based on real cases. Student performances are videotaped and critiqued.

This method of instruction allows the students to develop courtroom skills rapidly. The next phase of the course involves weekly meetings in which video tapes are used in much the same manner, but the topics are more advanced. During these meetings, case assignments are made and the students are encouraged to discuss cases they are handling.

The year-long format and intensive training sessions have allowed students additional and more varied opportunities to appear in court. Some students were sufficiently advanced at the close of the first semester to try entire misdemeanor cases before a jury. Their increased courtroom activity has benefitted not only the students; each case receives more attention and clients receive a better service because of the number of students available.

In recognition of the importance of this program, the leading criminal defense attorneys in the state have agreed to present lectures to the Criminal Defense Clinic students. This year's speakers included Bobby Lee Cook, Mark Kadish, Millard Farmer and August F. Siemon III.

Pursuant to a contract between the Board of Regents and the Georgia Department of Corrections, the Prisoner Legal Counseling Project, an adjunct of the Legal Aid Clinic, provides legal counseling to all inmates of the state prison system. The Department of Corrections provides funding for the P.L.C.P. to employ eight attorneys and four paralegals to render legal assistance to prisoners. Personnel of P.L.C.P. visit each state prison at least once a month and interview any inmate who desires legal counseling. At present there are over 18,000 inmates in the state prison system. In the past year, personnel of the P.L.C.P. conducted over 9,000 individual interviews with prisoners.

This year students were more involved in the work of the project. At the beginning of the year, potential habeas corpus cases were identified, and the trial transcripts which gave rise to them were distributed to several Legal Aid Clinic students. Students who received a transcript reviewed and synopsized it in preparation for a seminar-type meeting with the director, staff attorneys, and other students near the end of the semester. Students who worked on these cases were encouraged to discuss them with the lawyers as they prepared their research for the meeting. At least five of these reviews resulted in a habeas petition being filed. Students were involved in drafting the necessary documents.

This year accelerated the trend toward higher quality staff attorneys. Three years ago, the Legal Aid Clinic had an opening for an entry level staff attorney, and no one applied. This past year, thirteen third-year students and several attorneys applied for a staff attorney position in the office; many qualified applicants were turned down. Part of the difference is salary; with the increased funds from the county and city, starting salaries were raised from $15,000 to $20,000. In addition, hiring good people tends to have a "snowball" effect. Because better people have been hired, more and better students want to work in the office. For the first time this year, Legal Aid Clinic staff attorney job openings were posted at the top twenty law schools. Although the jobs were posted fairly late, applications were received from students at NYU, Georgetown, and Hastings.

With all of our staff attorney positions, the new policy is to hire for a term of one year only. The nature of the work tends to cause burnout, but a steady turnover should alleviate that problem. Turning jobs over after a year or two also has obvious budgetary advantages.

Finally, the offices of the Legal Aid Clinic and Prisoner Legal Counseling Project moved on July 1, 1987. The new facilities are in the College Square Building in downtown Athens. The new office space is laid out more efficiently than the old, is in much better condition, is much more convenient to the Law School, and is fully accessible to the handicapped. In addition, the monthly rent will be less than at the previous location.

2. The Prosecutorial Clinic

In 1986-1987 the Prosecutorial Clinic continued its affiliation, for the second consecutive year, with the Piedmont Judicial Circuit in neighboring Barrow, Jackson and Banks Counties. The Piedmont Circuit offered a wide range of opportunities for the students to participate and learn about the "real world" of criminal litigation.

Forty second and third-year students were enrolled during the 1986-87 school year. Demand for the clinic remains high. In the spring, forty-five rising second-year students went through an interview process for the twenty entering positions. For the past thirteen years, demand has exceeded the slots available by a 2:1 margin.

The Clinic continues to operate based on the premise that legal education cannot be complete without attention to the practical aspect of trial practice. Prosecution has remained a successful vehicle for offering clinical experiences for law students. The experience provides an exercise in carrying the burden of proof, a responsibility which requires preparation and investigation. It is excellent training for understanding the principles of evidence, criminal law, criminal procedure, trial practice and courtroom ethics.

Second year students investigated a variety of felony and misdemeanor cases in 1986-87. Clinic students took cases as they were made; developed interviewing skills with police, victims and witnesses as they found them; evaluated and summarized the case for prosecutorial merit; and applied those facts to the laws of Georgia.

Third-year students concentrated on courtroom experiences. They appeared in the Magistrate's Courts of Barrow, Jackson and Banks Counties, Probate Court in Barrow County and Superior Court in Jackson and Barrow Counties.

The range of experience was extensive and diverse. From doing closing arguments in a felony jury trial, to handling traffic matters in Probate Court, the students participated in all facets of the criminal courtroom experience. In addition to jury trials, the students handled non-jury trials, various motion hearings, probation revocation hearings, and preliminary hearings.

In addition to the in-court and investigative activity, two other parts of Clinic activity deserve mention. The Clinic had a weekly one-hour classroom component of formal instruction by the director, which covered such topics as evidence, criminal procedure, jury selection, all facets of trial practice and prosecutorial ethics. More importantly, for both the second and third-year students an intensive eight-night litigation skills course was conducted at the School of Law at the beginning of the school year to accelerate development of the skills necessary to present effectively a case in court. Similar to the content of a trial practice course, the intensive phase involved constant use of videotaping and review to rid the young advocates of bad habits and mannerisms. Direct examination, cross examination, impeachment, introduction of evidence, and examination of hostile witnesses all were studied and practiced to prepare students for court. Throughout the year, the trial practice simulations continued. The students were able to do a vior dire, to work on advanced impeachment techniques, and to polish other skills necessary to be an effective advocate.

The Prosecutorial Clinic remains an important vehicle for integrating classroom learning with real life situations, and for learning lawyering skills and techniques. It is hoped that these experiences and skills will provide a sound foundation for the young lawyer in future years.

The purpose of the Legal Research and Writing Program is to help students develop the essential lawyering skills of legal analysis, research, and writing. The Legal Research and Writing Program at Georgia has expanded over the last several years to allow students a number of opportunities for developing these skills. The program included the following during the 1986-87 academic year:

The First-Year Legal Research and Writing Course

All first-year law students are required to take a two-semester course in legal research and writing. The course is taught by three full-time, experienced instructors, all of whom are lawyers.

The course involves both extensive classroom instruction and intensive "hands-on" training. Students receive instruction in legal process, bibliography, research (including computerized legal research data bases), writing (including proper format and citation form), and analysis. During the fall semester, students learn research skills and objective legal writing. Students are required to complete a number of research exercises in the library and to write two legal memoranda based on hypothetical cases. During the spring semester, the focus of the course shifts to appellate advocacy skills. Students write an appellate brief, which requires extensive research, and engage in two rounds of oral argument based on the brief problem.

Students are aided throughout the year in learning proper citation form by using a computer-assisted instruction program in citation form designed by the instructors. That program is distributed nationally through the Center for Computer-Assisted Legal Instruction.

Many law schools require first-year students to take a course in legal research and writing. The course at Georgia, however, differs from most others in several significant ways:

1. The course is taught by three full-time instructors, all of whom are lawyers, rather than by upper-level students or adjunct faculty, as at many law schools. This gives our program the advantage of greater continuity and stability, since each of our instructors has been teaching legal research and writing for at least four years. It also gives our students better access to the instructors since they are available full-time.
2. Students are in the classroom three times a week during the fall semester for intensive in-class instruction and discussion. This provides students significantly more hours of in-class time than is provided in most first-year legal research and writing courses.
3. Most courses that combine legal research and writing begin with a segment on research before beginning instruction in writing. At Georgia, the course includes instruction in legal method, case analysis and synthesis, and legal writing before instruction in legal research. The instructors have found that students better understand the various legal sources and their importance to legal analysis when the material is developed in this sequence.
4. Our students spend more time on bibliography and research than do those at many law schools. Four to five weeks of the fall semester are allocated to this aspect of the course. Instructors use a sequence of in-class instruction, hands-on learning through the use of practice problems, and in-class group discussion of the practice problems for each source studied. This has proven a satisfactory method for teaching bibliography and research.

The Writing Workshop for Law Students

A writing workshop is included as a part of the legal research and writing program during the fall semester of each year. The purpose of the workshop is to provide supplementary instruction in basic writing skills for the small number of students for whom the more general coverage of those skills in the legal research and writing course is not sufficient.

The workshop meets weekly throughout the fall semester. Attendance at the workshop is voluntary; during the past year, eight to twelve students attended each session. At each workshop session, the workshop instructor leads students through discussion and exercises concerning a particular writing topic (for example, the proper use of commas, semi-colons and apostrophes). A workshop schedule is published at the beginning of the fall semester so that students can attend only those sessions covering topics in which they feel they need help.

Pretrial Litigation Seminar

A two credit-hour course in pretrial litigation is offered to third-year students during the spring semester. The seminar focuses on the development of a lawsuit from the first meeting with a client to last-minute trial preparation. Enrollment in the course is limited to 20 students to allow active participation by all students in the role-playing assignments of the course.

Students are required to draft complaints, answers, third-party complaints, discovery documents, and pretrial orders. In addition, each student must interview a client and attend two depositions, deposing the witness at one and preparing and representing the witness at another.

Seminar for Graduate Students

The Legal Research and Writing Program includes a seminar in legal research and writing for the Law School's LL.M. students, many of whom are foreign. The seminar is taught through both classroom presentations and individual assignments. The topics covered include: basic concepts of legal process and legal method, case briefing and analysis, legal research, legal writing, and citation. Each graduate student must complete a scholarly research paper of approximately 15 pages as a part of the seminar.

E. Graduate Legal Studies Program

During the 1986-1987 academic year, sixteen students were enrolled in the LL.M. degree program. All the students had done their basic legal training outside the United States in the following countries: Federal Republic of Germany, Belgium, France, Taiwan, Republic of Korea, China, Greece and South Africa. Several students focused their research on comparative issues of antitrust law, conflict laws, environmental law, international trade law, international law of state immunity, arbitration law, and labor law. Other students concentrated their research efforts on the law of international organizations, and human rights.

All LL.M. students participated in the Graduate Seminar. In the fall semester the seminar addressed basic issues of American federalism through discussions by the students with various members of the faculty of constitutional law, procedural law and certain basic areas of substantive law. Twenty members of the faculty took part in the seminar. A second component of the fall semester Graduate Seminar was a research and writing program conducted with the assistance of Mr. Bertis Downs, Legal Research and Writing Instructor at the Law School, whose main purpose was to acquaint the LL.M. students with American legal research and writing techniques which would be of great assistance to them in the preparation of the thesis required of each LL.M. student. In connection with the Graduate Seminar, each of them prepared a short article on a subject concerning relations between the Federal and State governments, namely preemption of state arbitration by the U.S. Arbitration Act. The Spring Semester Graduate Seminar consisted of oral presentations by the LL.M. students of their thesis subject followed by critiques and discussions among the students. Both semesters of the Graduate Seminar were under the supervision of the Director of Graduate Legal Studies.

It is expected that most of the students will complete their thesis work in the summer; all have satisfactorily completed their course work. Efforts to place several of the LL.M. students in the law firms in Atlanta and elsewhere have been made successfully by the Graduate Legal Studies Program with the assistance of an alumni committee on LL.M. placement, headed by Davis Hewitt, a 1974 graduate.

The purpose of recruitment and admissions continues to be refined under the supervision of the Graduate Studies Committee. As in the past all applicants must submit a proposed program of course work and research before admission. A brochure and poster on Graduate Legal Studies at the Law School has been prepared and is periodically mailed out to universities and national institutions dealing with study abroad as part of the plan to widen the geographical scope of recruitment and to establish links with premier universities in Western Europe and in other regions of the world.

The admissions process for 1987-1988 is nearing completion. It is likely that 18 to 22 students will enroll. These students were selected from a large number of applicants after stringent review by the Admissions sub-committee of the Graduate Studies Committee; they come from diverse backgrounds. Many will come to the Law School with several years of legal experience in their home countries. Three will receive funds from foundations and four will receive Graduate Assistantships. Moreover, ten out-of-state tuition waivers will be accorded them.

The LL.M. program has acquired international stature as illustrated by the substantial number of inquiries and applications received. The fact that several of the program's participants are funded by foundations is indicative of the considerable value placed on the LL.M. Program of this Law School by institutions and individuals both in the United States and abroad.

IV. LAW LIBRARY

The top funding priority for the Law School at the present time is the Law Library. At the end of academic year 1979-80, the Library ranked 19th in size nationally and was a real point of pride for the University as a law library of last resort for the state. During the year 1985-86, the library slipped to 23rd. This decline in ranking will continue at an accelerated pace, because the library ranked 85th among its counterparts in expenditures for new books last year and 46th in total budget. In terms of expenditures for computer service, it ranked 101st.

It is in the area of acquisitions that the Law School has dropped in national rank. Therefore, it will be necessary to supplement the Law Library budget in order for the library to stay in the top 20-25 in total number of volumes. The Law School is requesting $50,000 in additional state acquisition funds for 1987-88. At the same time, the Law School will rededicate its efforts to raise $2,000,000 in private endowment for the Library.

A. Collection

On April 30, 1987 the Law Library's collection consisted of:

	July 1, 1985-June, 1986	April 30, 1987
Physical Books	313,352	320,767
Microfilm	4,275 reels	4,378 reels
Microfiche	216,734	229,387

This gives the Law Library a total of 394,393 volumes of physical books or the equivalent volumes in microfilm, microfiche, and documents. At the end of the last academic year, this law library stood 81st among the 176 accredited law schools in the nation in the number of titles added to the collection.

B. Budget1. Acquisitions

The following is the comparison of expenditures by the Law Library for the academic year of 1985-1986. The chart for the current financial year lacks the expenditures of the last two months.

	July 1, 1985-June 30, 1986	July 1, 1986-April 30, 1987
Budget	$4421,999	$409,551
Transfer (internal)	7,564	2,000
Transfer (external)	56,000	25,000
Income	2,190	2,641
Restricted Accounts	9,205	11,038
Credit from dealers	3,884	1,362
	<hr/>	<hr/>
Total	$500,542	$451,593
Binding	$22,616	$14,947

The "income" listed in the above table comes from photocopying for interlibrary loans. Monies collected by the library for fines are deposited in a university account which does not accrue for the benefit of the Law Library.

2. Operating

The current 1986-87 operating budget of the Law Library is as follows:

Personnel Services	$427,890
Travel	2,000
Operating Expenses	30,000
Equipment	464,499
TOTAL	$924,390

There are three distortions of our present budget to consider. First, $40,000 had to be taken from the equipment (book) budget and transferred to operating expenses to pay for routine expenses such as telephones, office supplies, computer services (LEXIS, WESTLAW and OCLC). Second, any expenditures for new computer services must come from our equipment (book) budget. Third, the majority of legal materials are kept current by supplementation at regular intervals. The average cost of supplementation rose 8.6% in the academic year 1985-86.

To bring the Law Library back into the ranks of the top twenty law libraries in this country, we will need to advance dramatically in three areas:

1. Computerization: enhancement of the Library's operating budget to provide for greater support for computerization and for personnel.
2. Space: support for expansion of the Library's physical resources.
3. Acquisitions: greater support for book purchases.

1. COMPUTERIZATION

This year the School of Law hired with private money James L. Hoover, law librarian at Columbia University, to draft a proposal for a library automation program for the Law Library. The program he submitted is divided into three phases each building sequentially the foundation for the next. The resulting system should support and make more efficient virtually all internal library operations, plus provide access to the collections in a manner never before possible.

The School of Law plans to present the Hoover report to a foundation in hopes of securing funding for this automation. An enhanced access should allow the School to present itself, its library resources and services to the Georgia Bar in new ways which should increase the perception of the School as the state's center for legal research and education. The on-line catalogue would be available to every law firm, court or government attorney from personal computers. They could then effectively locate material held nowhere else in the state.

With computerization, the responsibilities of the Law Library staff have already outstripped the present personnel. Included in the Law School's budget requests for next year is a request for three personnel: an associate law librarian to help develop automation; a computer-trained librarian; and a stack superintendent.

2. EXPANSION OF THE LIBRARY PHYSICAL RESOURCES

The ABA Inspection Report of the Law School issued in 1985 found that the Library had "insufficient space." The Report also stated that "when the current collection takes up so much of the available space that there is not enough room to unpack gifts and current acquisitions for processing, inefficiencies must result."

To remedy this, the Law Library proposed the use of compact shelving. Units of the shelving were installed in two bays in the basement of the Library during the previous academic year. State money needs to be made available for the continuation of the compact shelving program started last year. This should cost $250,000 over a three-year period. However, additional space is now needed to meet the aspirations of the library development program.

The 1987 session of the Georgia General Assembly authorized $100,000 in planning money to develop plans for the construction of a permanent Rusk Center addition to the existing law building. Preliminary plans for this addition include approximately 12,000 feet of library space. Every effort should be made to have this project funded in the next legislative session, as there is excellent political support for it at this time.

Because all current equipment must come out of the book budget, the purchase of certain pieces of equipment has been postponed by necessity from year to year. The Law Library needs a microform printer. The one that is now in use is obsolete and fails to provide acceptable copies. A better piece of equipment would generate greater use of the microform research resources. New equipment is of even greater necessity with the trend of the United States Printing Office toward more documents in microform rather than in printed copy.

The purchase of a Se-Lin printer attachment for the OCLC M300 cataloging terminal would allow the library to prepare spine tapes, book pockets and cards more efficiently. The terminal would eliminate the repetitive typing of the same information manually and greatly increase efficiency.

All of the library's microform cabinets are now full. Additional cabinets are necessary to house the growing collection of court and government documents.

Finally, the Library needs to put in place wooden shelves compatible with the existing shelves in the area of reserve books on the third floor of the Annex.

The cost of this equipment is as follows:

- | | |
|-----------------------|---------|
| 1. Microform printer | $9,000 |
| 2. Se-Lin Printer | 5,000 |
| 3. Microform cabinets | 4,200 |
| 4. Wooden shelves | 6,000 |

3. GREATER SUPPORT FOR BOOK PURCHASES

The ABA Inspection Report of 1985 noted the decline in the budget support for the Library. The Report noted our slippage in overall rank and the decline in ranking as far as the size of the budget. They concluded that "decline in support for the Library has already been felt in the quality of the Library's collection, which has not kept pace with either the aspirations of the University of Georgia or the quality of its faculty." The Report noted that this budget situation was the result of inflation and the way the budget was developed. The Report noted that the Law Library budget was fixed at a percentage of the University Library's budget and concluded, "The Library may have autonomy in its operations, but it does not appear to have a real opportunity to present its budget needs."

All law books require annual supplements with annual increased costs at approximately 8%. The tools of a lawyer are books! Traditionally, law librarians recognize two classes of books:

1. Primary sources, including statutes, reports, administrative codes, attorney general opinions, etc. All of these are increasing in size, number of volumes and expense.
2. Secondary sources, including periodicals, texts, etc.

Each year more primary sources are published, and new types of sources come into being. For example, the federal courts will publish a manual of sentencing guidelines which will govern sentencing in the federal courts. This is as essential in a Law Library as volumes of statutes or reports. Many states are publishing more decisions of administrative agencies. If this Law Library is to maintain a complete American collection, to say nothing of support for the LL.M. program, a 25% increase in the normal library budget is a necessity at this time.

C. Some Highlights of the 1986-87 Academic Year

Through the efforts of Professor Gabriel Wilner, director of graduate legal studies, this Law Library has been designated as a repository for legal documents of the European Economic Communities. The law library will soon begin to receive thousands of documents relating to cases, legislation, parliamentary debates and special studies, as well as all the foreign affairs aspects of the European Communities. Much of the material is not available through sales and is otherwise unobtainable. The University of Georgia law library is the only library in the Southeast to be designated as a Specialized European Documentation Center by the EC.

For several years, Judge Harold Clarke of the Supreme Court of Georgia has collected the briefs presented to that court for this Law Library. Arranged by their official citation and velo bound for better use, this collection is unique to the Law Library. The briefs are collected and arranged by Jose Rodriguez who, with the help of James Whitehead, had developed a computer program to control the receipt of these briefs and to show for which reported cases briefs have been received. This is an invaluable addition to the collection.

The staff completed curating the Carl Sanders Collection--69 boxes in all of documents, photographs, news clips and correspondence, 16mm film, videos and tapes from the administration of Georgia's former governor. Sanders, governor from 1963-67, is a 1948 graduate of the School of Law.

The Law Library obtained a valuable reprint of the Domesday Book, a primary source for all aspects of English life and the source of the origin of property law in England. When a major repair of these volumes originally published precisely 900 years ago was undertaken a few years ago, the British government permitted a reprint to be made. The Law Library was most fortunate to purchase one of the few copies made.

A number of continuations were cancelled in an ongoing effort to gain substantial savings by prioritizing in this area. An evaluation of loose-leaf services and all subscriptions is an ongoing project to determine which ones can be discontinued.

The Law Library received favorable notice in an inspection by the Government Printing Office which periodically evaluates all depositories of government materials. In four categories--depository collections, organization of collection, maintenance, and cooperation--the library received an "excellent" rating. Staffing received a "satisfactory" rating.

For the second year, the library staff trained the first year students on WESTLAW computers in the Spring of 1987 as a part of the legal bibliography course. The West Publishing Company again furnished six Walt terminals to provide on-line training in a temporary learning center.

During the year staff member James Whitehead developed four computer programs--a listing of maps, a listing of briefs from the Supreme Court of Georgia, a program for control of books in the reserve area, and an enhanced catalog of materials in the microform collection.

During the ten-month period of July, 1986 through April, 1987, 2,703 titles were cataloged and classified. This year the entire German collection was fully catalogued and classified for the first time, and steps were taken to process the French collection. Work began on a classification scheme for the publications of the European Communities.

A modified IBM PC computer, known as the OCLC 300 work station, replaced the old Ramtak which has become obsolete. This new terminal was a significant improvement over the older version.

V. RESEARCH AND SERVICE PROGRAMS

A. Institute of Continuing Legal Education

The University of Georgia School of Law continues its extensive support of the Institute of Continuing Legal Education in Georgia, which was organized in 1965 and is a consortium of the Law Schools of the University of Georgia, Emory, Mercer, Georgia State University, and the State Bar of Georgia. Barney L. Brannen, a member of the Law School administrative faculty, is Director of the Institute, supported by Lawrence F. Jones, who serves as the Associate Director, Patricia Dunleavy as the Assistant Director and seven full-time and two part-time employees. Approximately 500 lawyers each year serve as writers, planners, and speakers in the continuing legal education program.

In August of this fiscal year the Institute moved its administrative offices into the historic Lumpkin House, Nineteenth Century home of Georgia's first Chief Justice, Joseph Henry Lumpkin. The upstairs is used as offices for the administrative staff with one administrative office and a computer room downstairs. The two parlor rooms and dining room are furnished with antique furniture and continue to be used for law related social functions.

From July 1, 1986 to June 30, 1987, the Institute presented 66 programs in approximately 50 areas of the law attended by 12,994 registrants. Two programs were held at the Georgia Center for Continuing Education. The other seminars were conducted in cities throughout Georgia in order to make these programs available to every lawyer with a minimum of travel. During the year 22 courses were telephone conferenced to 22 locations around the state. A number of courses were video-taped and replays were attended by over 1500 registrants. This year 36 specialized seminars were transmitted to Atlanta live via satellite. These programs were co-sponsored with national CLE providers, such as the American Bar Association and Practising Law Institute, and were attended by over 800 attorneys. Forty attorneys attended an extensive course conducted to train and develop trial lawyers. Lawyers were trained in trial tactics for eight days. During this rigorous period, the lawyer-students were on their feet, arguing, questioning, and developing skills in actual trial work. From opening to closing statements, from direct to cross-examination, from expert witness to eye witnesses, lawyers improved their skills under scrutiny and criticism from experienced trial lawyers and faculty members. Performances of students were video-taped in order to help them learn not only from the critiques and demonstrations by faculty members but also by reviewing their own performances visually.

The faculty of the University of Georgia School of Law continues to play a role in continuing legal education. As consultants, speakers, and writers, their contributions were indispensable in making ICLE programming a success.

Dean J. Ralph Beaird, University Professor of Law, is a member of the Institute's Board of Trustees and actively participates in Board meetings, serves on various committees, and contributes substantially to the decision-making process.

Professor R. Perry Sentell, Jr, Professor of Law, spoke at the 33rd Institute for City and County Attorneys held in Athens.

Professor Albert M. Pearson, III served as Team Leader at the Georgia Institute of Trial Advocacy presented by the Institute of Continuing Legal Education in Georgia. Professor Ronald L. Carlson was a part of the faculty, and Rick Good served as Assistant Team Leader of the Institute as did Wendy Watts who will join the UGA School of Law faculty in the fall of 1987. Professor Ronald L. Carlson also conducted a seminar on Successful Trial Practice.

In October of this fiscal year the Institute dedicated its newly built print shop and classroom building to A. Gus Cleveland and named it the A. G. Cleveland Building. Mr. Cleveland, known as the "father" of Continuing Legal Education in Georgia, was honored at a ceremony immediately following the fall Board of Trustees Meeting. The 3,000 foot structure houses the extensive printing operations as well as a conference room.

The Institute print shop prepared 59 publications totaling 17,016 copies and reprinted 3 other publications totaling 400 copies that were in demand by Georgia lawyers. Attached is a list of the programs presented during the year. The publications list and reprint list are also attached.

Barney L. Brannen, Jr. is President-Elect of the Association of Continuing Legal Education Administrators, a national organization with 250 members. ACLEA affords its members the opportunity to share experiences and promotes professionalism among continuing legal education administrators.

Mr. Brannen also is a member of the ALI-ABA Arden House III Steering Committee and its Advisory Board. The Committee examines continuing legal education's present and future needs and will conduct a national program in November, 1987.

B. Institute of Continuing Judicial Education

Program Highlights

ICJE's 1986-87 program year saw the Institute involved in 38 activities that served 1,792 constituents. While the Institute again offered its traditional annual calendar of training events, the bi-annual orientation course for trial judges and an expanded training course for instructor judges of the magistrates' recertification course augmented the schedule.

Several experimental ventures undertaken during FY'87 met with success; some resulted in disappointment. The first, a telephone survey of lawyers, judges and appellate judges to determine needs of workers' compensation administrative law judges worked out very well. A long-range plan, a basic course, and some immediate continuing judicial education programs are being developed as a result of this unique effort. The second, dovetailing ICJE's in-state semi-annual offering for probate judges with the annual meeting of the National College of Probate Judges, diminished attendance at this usually well-attended fall activity. The cost of the national course was too great, and its content focus was not relevant to most Georgia judges. The third experiment, which involved execution of regional seminars for traffic court (usually municipal court) judges and clerks, also proved less than noteworthy. Developments in this topical area were not sufficient to merit an '86-87 course. So in the second year of the offering there was nothing new to market, and participation fell off. The fourth activity enabled faculty cadre who serve in the basic and recertification courses for magistrates to learn about adult educational instructional design and course development. The program again proved to be successful and deserves augmentation and offering to a wider group of CJE instructors in the future.

Mercer, UGA, Emory and Georgia State law faculty members all provided valuable public service instructional time to the Institute, once again demonstrating the wisdom and strength inherent in the consortium approach to formal legal education's support of Georgia CJE. Judges performed the bulk of instructional chores throughout the year, which reemphasized the collegial, peer enrichment character of CJE. Superior Court Judges continued to perform a significant instructional role in the regimen of statutorily mandated training for magistrates. At each regional seminar a local superior court judge conducted the three-hour instructional block devoted to an aspect of evidence law, this year targeting hearsay and the use of exceptions to the hearsay rule. In FY'88, state court judges will assume instructional leadership roles in landlord tenant law and judicial ethics.

Development of computer-assisted instruction on evidence law, involving individual or small group use of microcomputers in responding to preprogramed problems, also continued this year. A unit on character evidence is now in place. Another problem-driven evidence instructional program was conducted again this year, specifically developed for use with juvenile court judges in FY'86. Similarly, a module of instruction on judicial writing first used with State Court Judges proved to merit wider use. It was a success with superior court judges and probate court judges.

ADMINISTRATIVE HIGHLIGHTS

ICJE's FY'87 state appropriations totaling $328,334, were augmented during the fall of 1986 by receipt of a $29,000 grant. It permitted ICJE to continue a basic training program for traffic court judges and clerks with an eye toward conducting this program, via satellite transmission from Athens, on a regional basis in six to eight locations throughout the state during the last six months of 1987. Funds for this experimental effort at local/regional programming were the result of a National Highway Traffic Safety Administration monies granted to ICJE through the Governor's Office of Highway Safety. The program will be conducted September 1, 1987.

FY'87 was the third full year in which the Institute operated with its own half-time bookkeeper/accounting assistant on staff, which enabled expenditure or encumbrance of most program and operating funds at year's end while avoiding a negative balance. For the fourth straight year no attendee mileage expenses were reimbursed to program participants due to insufficient legislative funding to cover this attendance expense. Again, no adverse impact on participation levels seemed to result from this policy.

The mandatory training sessions for magistrates, both the 40 hour basic course and the 20 hour recertification course, were again conducted to audiences limited to not more than 60. While this necessitated a greater number of course offerings, it facilitated a more sound, thorough, and practical or relevant learning environment for attendees. It was more pleasant for instructors as well and promoted regionalized execution of the curriculum, which saved time and travel expense for all involved.

Mandatory continuing judicial education for superior court judges became effective on January 1, 1986. Twelve hours of training per year, including two hours training in judicial ethics every two years, was the minimal training standard adopted by the superior court judges for themselves. In FY'87, 100 percent of the active superior court judges met their requirement, with only a handful of senior superior court judges falling below the standard.

STATE-BASED TRAINING

Exhibit A lists the Institute's state-based instructional activities conducted during 1986-87, identifying the constituent group served, date, number of attendees and course site. It is followed by Exhibit B, a chronological presentation of individual program schedules, evaluation summaries, and financial closeout statements pertaining to each of ICJE's state-based activities. Such state-based training comprises ICJE's foremost educational responsibility.

NATIONALLY-BASED TRAINING

Of 50 applications received in 1986-87 for financial aid to attend nationally-based training, 46 were granted some level of funding (usually 80% of costs) and 34 individuals actually took advantage of this assistance. Exhibit C details ICJE's support of participation in nationally-based training.

FUTURE NEEDS, TASKS AND GOALS

Continuation and technical improvement each year of the established and presently successful program of basic and continuing judicial education is ICJE's immediate goal.

Administrative law judges have been identified as a new group for which CJE activities will be targeted in FY'88. However, accurate assessment of training needs, together with articulate formulation of instructional objectives resulting in long-range, cyclical, comprehensive curriculum plans for each constituent group already served by ICJE still has not been completed. Program planning committees, harried with designing the next upcoming seminar, must still be encouraged and helped to adopt a long-range view, as well as to focus continuing efforts on materials for new judge orientation.

ICJE needs an additional full-time person, initially to improve existing administrative operations. Furthermore, expansion of programmatic workload cannot be contemplated without this individual. The position should probably be devoted 1/2 time to bookkeeping and financial management and 1/2 time to general clerical or conference coordinating work. Since the spring of 1983, the Institute has been operating without this position, relying on part-time college student help to fill the slack. These students have worked out commendably. We've been fortunate to get good help; yet that may not always be the case with only part-time positions to offer. The Institute's constituencies merit more professional service.

Orientation of new judges through use of self-study aids is an approach continuing to be tested which began in 1985-86. This activity will still have to be carefully structured, promoted and evaluated. ICJE has received a $5,000 grant of financial aid from the State Bar Foundation to conduct a three-year pilot test of this concept. The annual turnover in trial judgeships is often too little to warrant a separate training program for new judges, and presently no orientation regimen of activity exists at all for new judges of limited and specialty jurisdiction courts. This programmatic void must be filled. Self-study seems a reasonable option to pursue.

Mandatory training programs have been in existence for approximately five years for magistrates, probate court judges, juvenile court judges, and superior court clerks. These programs now need evaluation. Input from the constituent groups affected, together with the pertinent certification authorities, is an essential element for this evaluation effort.

Full state funding of ICJE's programs and operations continues as a major goal of the Institute's Trustees. For FY'88, such funding would require an appropriation of about $572,650, while approximately $487,268 has been provided. A $2.00 tack-on to civil filing fees in all courts may provide the solution of CJE funding in Georgia, even though such a plan would require adoption of a constitutional amendment.

Training of judge-faculty in adult educational instructional techniques to improve the quality of state-based course offerings is a growing element of state judicial educational efforts in other parts of the country. ICJE lacks the funding at present to enable this form of refinement in CJE. Nevertheless, financing for this undertaking should be part of future ICJE funding plans.

VI. STUDENT AFFAIRS

A. PLACEMENT

1. Office Activity

The 1986-87 academic year of The University of Georgia School of Law's Placement Office was yet another one of continued success and expansion in the areas of office services and employment of our students in the legal job market. The annual fall on-campus interview program maintained its size as 200 employers scheduled interview dates through the placement office. A total of 162 employers actually conducted fall on-campus interviews.

The spring on-campus interview program had a total of 44 employers participating. The graduating class this May again exceeded the national placement rate of 60% employed at the time of graduation with a 73% placement rate. Also, there was a very high reporting placement rate by the first and second year students securing summer law clerkships (50% and 75% respectively).

While it is gratifying to view the Placement Office's record of success in serving both students and employers, it is vital that the office continue its efforts to improve and increase the quality and scope of services offered. In the current climate of increased competition among job applicants for positions and employer efforts to curb recruitment costs, it will be necessary for the successful placement office to provide innovative yet economical programs to ensure high visibility of students among potential employers.

With that in mind, the Placement Office will continue to direct its energies towards expanding and strengthening its on-going placement program in order to maintain a competitive edge in the marketplace. The on-going program's three primary objectives are:

1. Increased employer representation
2. Expanded in-house services
3. Provision of office-sponsored programs

The primary objective, increased employer representation by way of on-campus interviews, recruiting conferences and job postings for students to pursue, continues to be one that this office expends a tremendous amount of time and energy towards achieving. This past fall the office had 162 employers conduct interviews at the law school. The office also had 186 employers this past fall who requested packets of student resumes; there were also 232 job notices posted for students to contact employers directly.

During the past fall, the office continued to participate in the Southeastern Law Placement Consortium (SELPC) of which Georgia is a founding member. There was a total of 135 nationwide legal employers participating in the 1986 Eleventh Annual SELPC Recruiting Conference. A total of 63 Georgia law students attended the October recruiting conference, which provides exposure for our students to employers from outside the southeast region and also complements our on-campus interview program which is approximately 70% Georgia employers. Of the 49 students responding to the SELPC follow-up survey, 27% received job offers and 4% accepted their SELPC job offer. While we were pleased that so many of our students received job offers, we were disappointed by the low acceptance rate. These figures, however, certainly highlight the preference our students have to remain in the Southeast, specifically Georgia, to work.

Although the fall season is by far the most hectic time for the placement office, it is important to note that historically only 30% to 40% of both second and third year students will have obtained employment by the start of spring semester. This 30% to 40% is generally in the top academic portion of their class. Through the years, the Placement Office has been making conscious efforts to increase employer representation during the spring semester for those students who are still seeking either summer or permanent employment. We seek an employer market that includes small law firms, federal/state/local government agencies, businesses and judicial clerkships that do not have stringent academic hiring criteria and tend to interview applicants closer to the actual time of hiring. It is frustrating, however, that this is the very same employer market which is reluctant to identify itself for fear of being deluged by applicants or having to spend money (or lose billing hour time) by having a lawyer come to campus to conduct interviews and seems to prefer hiring through what is commonly called "the good ole boy" network.

At the start of spring semester, the office mailed approximately 4,000 letters of invitation to this "hidden" employer market. Accompanying the letter was a profile sheet about our student body, faculty and school facilities. We were pleased with the results of our mailing as we had a total of 44 on-campus interviews, 119 employer requests for student resume packets and 241 job postings for students to contact employers directly during spring semester. A new program developed this past spring in conjunction with the other three law schools in the state was the Spring Four-in-One Recruiting Conference. The program was held at the Emory Law School on Saturday, April 11, and there were a total of 24 employers participating. Georgia had a total of 36 first, second and third year students attend and also one LL.M. student.

It is ironic that while we concentrate our efforts during spring semester to assist those students who are generally in the lower academic ranks and still seeking employment, we must also begin preparations for the upcoming fall interview season (which is still a good six months away). This February we mailed approximately 4,000 invitations to legal employers who do the majority of their recruiting in the fall of each year. To date, we have already scheduled 155 employers to conduct interviews at the law school this fall.

Our office continues to produce a placement directory of second and third year law students and to mail it to approximately 4,000 legal employers. The directory contains photos and/or resume synopses of the students and is mailed to employers during the month of July. The placement directory continues to be the most effective marketing tool of the Placement Office in terms of educating prospective employers about student body quality, faculty, facilities, and services provided by the Georgia Placement Office.

Two programs developed in 1983 in an effort to increase student placement opportunities were the England Summer Clerkship Program (restricted to first year students) and the UGA Law School Off-Campus Washington, D.C. Interview Program.

The England Summer Clerkship Program continues to do very well in its fourth year with five first year students obtaining summer clerkships with British firms in London, England.

The Washington, D.C. Off-Campus Interview Program is now the South Atlantic Recruitment Program (SARC), as we joined forces with the law schools of Florida and South Carolina in 1986. The 1986 SARC Program went extremely well, attracting 19 D.C. employers. There was a total of seven Georgia students who participated. Students participating in this program are responsible for their own travel and lodging expenses to D.C. It is expected that the level of student participation will fluctuate from year to year as a reflection of the geographic flexibility of each class. Currently, twelve employers are already registered for the 1987 program scheduled for September 11.

The second objective of expanded in-house services is one that this office continues putting forth a great deal of time and effort to achieve. We are very fortunate to have a large, centrally located placement resource center, which houses bulletin boards for job postings, bookshelves for employer data sheet notebooks, a variety of directories and career-related materials, four filing cabinets of employers' resumes, and two typewriters for student use in their job hunt. We have office subscriptions to three national legal periodicals, two nationally acclaimed directory sets of selected law firms in America, and a directory of corporate counsel. Both sets provide a wealth of information that can only be found in these particular directories.

We continue to publish a twice monthly Alumni Job Placement Newsletter, under the capable editorship of the office's administrative secretary. There are approximately 100 subscribers to the Newsletter. The Newsletter contains job postings from employers seeking to hire a lawyer with one to five years experience and is mailed to Georgia law school alumni on the first and fifteenth of each month.

The location of individual student message boxes in the area directly outside of the Placement Office has greatly facilitated the delivery of employment-related messages to students and has provided a better survey method which our office may use when collecting employment status information from students for our record keeping duties.

This past year the Placement Office again had an additional staff member on a half-time basis. The half-time staff member is an undergraduate student who works twenty hours a week as an administrative assistant to the Placement Director. She is available for job search counseling to students and in particular worked heavily with the first year students. She also coordinated all of the office's seminars for the academic year which totaled about 30 programs. Also during the past year, the office had a half-time secretary who assisted with the tremendous paper workload that occurs in the office. Both individuals contributed a great deal in the smooth functioning of the office and timely performance of the office services to the law school community and employers.

The final objective of the provision of office-sponsored programs is one that is ever-changing to suit the needs of the currently enrolled student body. Our office surveys each class at the beginning of fall and identifies from the student body response the type of programs to be scheduled during the year.

Our standard offerings are seminars on resume preparation, cover letter writing, interview dress, interview techniques, self-directed job searches, and judicial clerkship opportunities. The office makes available videotaped practice interviews. Our office also relies on special interest student groups to sponsor career-related forums as well as the Younger Lawyers Section of the Georgia State Bar to sponsor forums. Our office has a good working relationship with the central UGA
Placement Office and coordinates programs with it when appropriate for law students.

While the above described placement office activities may reflect a basic program of any law school, the results must be seen as more than simply helping a student to acquire employment. Through contacts with law school alumni, state bar members and professional colleagues, student employment possibilities were increased, but service to the state and region were enhanced as well. Through involvement in the National Association for Law Placement (NALP), (the Placement Director is a past member of the National Advisory Board, past chair of the National Conference Programs Committee, and currently member of the Board of Directors); through the Southeastern Law Placement Consortium for which the Director has served as Secretary and currently Chair; through committee work for the State Bar of Georgia; and through personal visitation trips to cities where legal employers demonstrate an interest in our graduates, the school's representation and reputation is strengthened.

2. Recruitment and Placement Activity

During the academic year 1986-87, the Law Placement Office scheduled 206 on-campus interview sessions for prospective employers of Georgia law graduates. In addition, the Law Placement Office provided assistance to 190 employers who recruited off-campus, to 305 employers who requested student resume packets, to 473 employers who posted job notices for students to contact them directly, and to 1260 employers who posted a job notice in the Alumni Newsletter. The total number of employer contacts for the 1986-87 academic year was 2434.

NOTE OF INTEREST

1) The three year placement rate average for first years for June is 53%.

1. Moot Court

The Moot Court program enjoyed an outstanding year. The program involved over 140 students engaged in six intercollegiate and two intraschool appellate competitions, Georgia compiled an overall record of 23 wins and 11 losses. Georgia won three of the competitions and advanced to at least the final four in the other three competitions.

The program continues to operate under the direction of a student board, which was advised and coached this year by Robert D. Brussack and Jere W. Morehead. The Board was composed of the following third year law students:

Chairperson - Neal Quirk

Vice Chairperson/Hulsey-Kimbrell Coach - Pete Muller

National Team - Richard Kopelman, Michael Terry and Terry Williams

ABA Coach - Ken Wynne

Jessup Coach - Matt Coles

Frederick Douglas Coach - Cynthia Roberts

Intrastate "A" Coach - Jennifer Northrop

Intrastate "B" Coach - Mary Ann Jenkins

Russell Coordinators - Joe Atkins and Ann-Marie Ernst

Talmadge Coordinator - Jacqueline West

Hulsey-Kimbrell Competition

The season began with a decisive win over the University of Florida in the annual Hulsey-Kimbrell Competition held in Jacksonville during the Georgia/Florida weekend. The team of Kevin Gough and Maureen Callaghan won the round. The team was coached by Peter Muller.

National Competition

The National Team, which is composed of our three most outstanding third year advocates, won every award in the Region V Southeastern Competition. The National Team won the Best Team, Best Brief and Best Oralist awards in route to a perfect 6-0 record in the competition. They defeated Florida State, Emory, Miami, South Carolina, Georgia State and Mercer. In the final rounds in New York City, Georgia advanced to the final eight before losing to Tulane. Out of over 150 participating law schools, Georgia's brief finished fourth in the nation. The National Team was composed of Richard Kopelman (Best Oralist), Michael Terry and Terry Williams.

Jessup Competition

The Jessup Team finished third out of seven schools participating in the regional rounds. The team won the Best Brief Runner-up Award. The team was composed of Greg Giornelli, Leon Jones, Elizabeth Marlowe, Greg Hecht and Michael Moore. Giornelli and Jones finished among the top five oralists in the competition. The team was coached by Matt Coles.

ABA Competition

The ABA team of Paul Attaway and Danny Ragland advanced to the final four out of fifteen participating law schools in the regional competition. The other ABA team of Michaela Young and Lee Wellborn finished with a 1-1 record in the regional competition. Both teams were coached by Ken Wynne.

Frederick Douglass Competition

The Frederick Douglass team of Roy Hadley and Jacqueline West advanced to the final four of their regional competition involving fourteen law schools. The team was coached by Cynthia Roberts.

Intrastate Competition

For the fourth time in the past five years, Georgia won the annual Intrastate Competition against Emory, Georgia State and Mercer. Georgia's "A" team compiled a 5-1 record in route to the state championship. The "A" team defeated an Emory team in the semifinals and a Georgia State team in the final round of the competition. Richard Ford of the "A" team won the Best Oralist trophy. The other members of the "A" team were Stephanie DeBerry and Ben Brewton. The "A" team was coached by Jennifer Northrop. Georgia's "B" team, composed of Paul Fields, Kerry Quinn and Pam South, did not advance into the semifinal rounds. The "B" team was coached by Mary Ann Jenkins.

2. Mock Trial

Intramural Competitions

Our fall intramural competition is aimed primarily at third year students. Again this fall, we had 64 students, entered in teams of 2, in the competition. Dozens of other students served as witnesses. At the end of the six-week competition, the team of Reggie Smith and Lewis Lamb defeated Kevin Gough and Danny Ragland. The spring intramural competition is limited entirely to second year law students. As was the case with the fall competition, 64 students competed in teams of 2. The spring competition was noteworthy because it involved a problem devised by Professor Carlson. As part of the Law Day activities, the final rounds were held in the Moot Court Room. The team of Clay Metts and Russell Bryant defeated Frank Crittendon and Jim Jordan.

Intercollegiate Competitions

Our most successful intercollegiate competition was the National Student Trial Advocacy Competition sponsored by ATLA. Our school was represented by the team of Kevin Gough and Mike Ernst, with Mike Terry serving as a witness. This team advanced to the final rounds of the Southeast Regional Competition before succumbing to eventual National Champion Cumberland University. We entered two teams in the National Trial Competition sponsored by the American Bar Association. One team consisted of Mary Jo Bradbury, Lewis Lamb and Leigh McCranie and Julie Dampier. The third intercollegiate competition is the Intrastate Competition sponsored by the Younger Lawyers Division of the State Bar. Our teams were Pete Muller, Joleen Casey and Danny Ragland and Donna

Avans, Ural Glanville and Ashley Richards. This year's Intrastate Competition added a new category -- a written pre-trial order. The University of Georgia team won the award for the best pre-trial order.

Organization

In the Spring of 1987, a mock trial board was established to act as the administrative organization for all mock trial activities. It is hoped that the newly formed mock trial board will provide the continuity of leadership and organization that the moot court board provides for appellate advocacy.

3. Student Bar Association

The Student Bar Association (SBA) serves as a liaison between the faculty and the law students. The SBA functions as the social "organ" of the law school. This year SBA president Rachel Iverson held a voting position on the Dean Search Committee composed of one student, four members elected by the faculty, and the dean of the College of Pharmacy who served as chairman. As the student representative, Iverson organized interviews of candidates for dean with student organization leaders. The SBA also recruited and placed students on faculty committees on which students are allotted, a position including some voting and some non-voting slots.

SBA activities included: fall orientation for first-years and transfers; a reception for LL.M. students and faculty at the Lumpkin House; seminars cosponsored with the Law Placement Office; a welcoming party for the first-year students; the annual Halloween party, fall Bullroast, Barristers Ball and the Libel Show; and the second annual SBA Faculty Auction. SBA coordinated many of the activities of Law Day and also helped the law alumni office with the annual fall alumni weekend activities. The SBA president attended the ABA National Convention in New York City and served as a voting member of the University Council and as a member of the University Student Affairs Advisory Board. The SBA continued to provide a refrigerator, television and phone service for the Law School community.

4. Georgia Law Review

By graduation on May 16, the Managing Board for Volume 21 of the Review had published the fourth issue of Volume 20 and the first issue of Volume 21, a special symposium issue entitled "Congress' Role and Responsibility in the Federal Balance of Power." The second and third issues will be published by July, the fourth by August, and the fifth issue--an additional issue published on a special congressional issue--will be taken over by the Managing Board of Volume 22. The fifth issue is one of which the Review will be especially proud. It will be a symposium on affirmative action including contributions from William Bradford Reynolds, the assistant attorney general for civil rights, and Benjamin Hooks, the executive director of the NAACP.

The Review was able to hire a new secretary in December after staffing difficulties had resulted in problems with staying on schedule. The new secretary enabled the student staff to meet deadlines. Managing Editor Keith Reynolds was able to overcome some early financial difficulties inherited from his predecessor, and the billing for Volumes 20 and 21 is completely current. Reynolds submitted a proposal to the dean that the Review bring its subscription costs on to a par with other reviews; that proposal was approved, and the subscription price will be raised to $25.00 from $15.00.

Issue No. 2 of Volume 21 will include a lengthy case comment on the Georgia Supreme Court's decision in Yost v. Torok, the first major student critique of the case. Issue No. 4 will include an article by Georgia professor Richard Wellman. The other articles in the volume cover a wide range of topics, including workers' compensation, land use, and state taxation of interstate banking. The articles strike a good balance between the theoretical and the practical.

Articles in the Review were cited in 33 different opinions during the year, by courts ranging from the U.S. Supreme Court to several state courts. Several professors who had their articles accepted by other journals sought out the Review as their publisher. In three of these instances, the Review was preferred to Stanford, Duke, and University of Pennsylvania reviews. This indicates that the Review's reputation as a solid scholastic publication remains sound.

5. Georgia Journal of International and Comparative Law

The

Georgia Journal of International and Comparative Law publishes three issues annually, dedicated to the analysis of developments in international law. The international journal has subscribers in over 40 countries around the world and is recognized both nationally and internationally. The Journal contains articles by scholars, practitioners and students on a variety of topics in the field of international law. The goals of the Journal include publishing quality pieces of interest to scholars and practitioners in the field of international law, commenting upon current developments in the law and to speculate upon future trends, and providing students with an opportunity to publish in a major journal.

This year, in addition to the normal schedule of publication, the Journal published a supplement to Volume 16. This special issue commemorated the 200th anniversary of Congress and the U.S. Constitution. Contributors to this issue include: Rep. Dante Fascell, chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee; former U.S. Attorney General Griffin Bell; and Lorot Miller Ruppe, director of the Peace Corps.

During the past year the Journal was invited to conduct a workshop at the National Conference of International Law Journals. At the conference, the 1986-87 editor-in-chief and a member of the 1987-88 managing board gave a video-taped presentation on the creation of an endowment fund. The video-tape, filmed at the University of Georgia by the editor-in-chief and one of the 1986-87 executive editors, received much favorable recognition.

The year saw the creation of an endowment fund for the benefit of the Journal. With the help of Journal alumni and the faculty advisor, Gabriel Wilner, the fund has received cash contributions of over $12,000 and pledges of over $50,000. The purpose of such a fund is to sponsor special Journal activities and projects and to help make the Journal more self-supporting.

On February 24, 1987, U.S. Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, writing an opinion for the majority, cited the Georgia Journal of International and Comparative Law not once but twice (both in the text and a footnote in the opinion), citing an article by Professor Gary Born of the University of Arizona in Volume 17:1 of the Journal. The Supreme Court decision in this case , Asahi Metal Co., Ltd. v. the Superior Court of California, is expected to be influential in the area of foreign sovereign immunity. Such a citation, therefore, is a distinct honor.

6. Georgia Society of International & Comparative Law

The primary purpose of the Society is to provide programs that educate the Law School and University communities on current issues in international law and to inform students of career opportunities available in the field of international law. The Georgia Society of International and Comparative Law enjoyed an active 1986-87 academic year. The Society sponsored numerous lectures featuring outstanding legal scholars. These included Daryl Buffenstein of Paul, Hastings, Janofsky & Walker who gave a two-part seminar on immigration law; Grant Lawrence, a member of the legal service of the European Economic Community; George W. Ball, former deputy undersecretary of state for economic affairs and ambassador to the United Nations; W. Tapley Bennett, former ambassador to NATO; and Alain Smets, general manager of Sabena Airlines in Atlanta.

The annual banquet this year featured Robert von Mehren of Debevoise & Plimpton who spoke on the series of Libyan oil concession arbitrations. Members of the Society also participated in such activities as the Georgetown International Law Weekend and the annual meeting of the American Society of International Law in Boston, Massachusetts.

7. Honor Court

The Honor Court is composed of eight law students who hear cases involving alleged violations of the Honor Code. Violations include "lying, stealing, cheating or conduct inconsistent with the rights of fellow law students, or conduct engaged in by a student with the intent to gain an unfair advantage over another law student." The justices of the court are elected by the students. Three justices are elected from the third-year class, three from the second-year class, and two from the first-year class. One of the third-year justices serves as Chief Justice. The Chief Justice is elected by the second-year and third-year classes. The court must follow the Honor Code Constitution and must insure that the due process rights of all students are protected. The justices have found it necessary to consult with faculty members concerning the legal aspects of a case on a regular basis. The Honor Court needs continuing access to communication with faculty members to insure the proper legal procedures are followed.

The justices appoint five students as prosecutors who investigate reports and file charges against the alleged student if they find reasonable cause to believe that a breach of the Honor Code has occurred. If charges are filed, the justices will hold a hearing on the matter to determine the guilt or innocence of the student as well as the punishment of a student who is found guilty of a violation of the Honor Code.

8. Federalist Society for Law and Public Policy

During the 1986-87 school year the group's activities included viewing the film series "Free To Choose" by economist Milton Friedman and sponsoring a debate on the United States Commerce Department's proposals to amend the Clayton Act (proposals designed to lessen the present restrictions on corporate mergers) by Robert Brinkley, deputy general counsel to the U.S. Department of Commerce, and professor James Ponsoldt of the School of Law.

Members also attended the Society's annual symposium in Washington, D.C. in January, 1987. The keynote speakers included U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese, Vice President George Bush, and U.S. Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia. These symposia are held annually at various locations around the country.

Each year the activities of the Society are initiated and conducted by current members.

9. Lumpkin Law Revue

The Lumpkin Law Revue staff published four issues this year. Among the highlights in those issues were: an analysis of the constitutionality of drug testing; a profile of the anti-nuclear group "Beyond War," and an interview with UGA interim president Henry King Stanford. The staff also published the first-ever literary issue of the Revue, featuring poetry and prose by students, faculty, and administrators in the School of Law.

The Revue encountered some difficulties because of a default on the part of advertisers, but next year's staff plans to seek more numerous advertisers and ones of a more reliable nature.

10. Christian Legal Society

The Christian Legal Society held biweekly organizational meetings, weekly Bible discussion groups, and a picnic at the beginning of the year. The group sponsored a buddy program for incoming first-year students. Special speakers sponsored by the group included attorneys Mike Jennings, Stouffel & Stouffel, Chattanooga; Greg Garcia of the Athens law firm of Blount, Garcia & Singh; and David Montgomery of Christian Reconciliation Services in Atlanta. The group also sponsored a number of informal gatherings.

11. Women Law Students Association

The Women Law Students Association continues to explore the roles of women in the legal system. This year WLSA presented the fifth annual Edith House Lecture. Antonia Handler Chayes, former under secretary of the U.S. Air Force and chairman of ENDISPUTE, spoke on "Alternative Dispute Resolution." An overflow audience attended the lecture March 12 in the law school Courtroom. The series has grown in reputation and attendance each year and has gained a prominent place among the campus community. It is beginning to rival in popularity and prestige the well-established Sibley Lecture Series. While both men and women attend the Edith House Series, it enjoys increasing acceptance among women as one of the few annual lectures on campus named for a woman and featuring prominent professional women as speakers. The series honors Ms. House, one of the first women graduates of the School of Law.

12. Black Law Student Association

The Black Law Students Association helps strengthen the school's outreach to minority students in order to make their three years of law studies successful and fulfilling. As a continuing community service project, BLSA members wrote and recorded public service messages for local radio stations aimed at the average citizen who might not know how to obtain legal counsel. The PSA's covered such topics as where to go for legal help and what to look for in a lawyer.

BLSA helped recruit black students by contacting perspective first year students by letter and telephone to encourage them to enter the University of Georgia School of Law. These contacts helped let black candidates know that the school was interested in them and that they could enjoy a very positive experience here as welcomed members of the student body. BLSA also helped compile a placement resume booklet of black law students, which was mailed in the fall to 200 potential employers.

Two students attended the national convention of BLSA in Houston, Texas under the sponsorship of the School of Law, and ten other students attended the regional meeting in Atlanta where the Georgia Frederick Douglass Moot Court team won second place in regional competition.

The association continued a drive to raise money to commission a portrait of Judge Robert Benham for the School of Law. The group also worked to build an alumni network of future financial support for BLSA projects and programs.

BLSA sponsored a series of study sessions with faculty members for first year minority students on such topics as test taking, study skills, and note taking. The group made available to first year students a number of self-help cassettes (and a cassette player) on similar topics as well.

The annual banquet was held in Athens in April. Janice Thurmond, an Athens attorney and an alumna of the School of Law, was the featured speaker.

VII. Special Events

A. John A. Sibley Fall Lecture

"The Congress: The Purse, the Purpose, and the Power" was the topic for the Fall Sibley Lecture by prominent jurist Abner J. Mikva, who spoke on Thursday, September 25 at 3:30 p.m. in the Law Auditorium. Mikva is Circuit Judge of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

Prior to his 1979 appointment to the bench, he served five terms as U.S. Congressman, representing portions of Chicago and its suburbs. He was appointed to the Brown Commission which provided the main impetus for efforts to recodify the criminal laws of the United States. He served on both the Judiciary and Ways and Means Committees while in the Congress. He began his political career in 1956, serving five consecutive terms in the Illinois House of Representatives.

B. Joint Meeting and Law Alumni Weekend

The annual fall meeting for alumni leaders took place on October 17 and 18. Intramural trial competitions, awards, social events, and entertainment characterized a full schedule which included meetings of the Board of Visitors and Law School Association Council.

Friday's events included the closing arguments of the fall ATLA Mock Trial Intramural Competition at 2 p.m. in the Courtroom. A meeting of the Class Challenge Funds Campaign representatives was held at 4 p.m. at the Joseph Henry Lumpkin House.

A social hour preceded a Friday night dinner at the Georgia Center. Following dinner the UGA Jekyll Island Theater Players presented selections from "The Pirates of Penznace," "Hello Dolly," and "The Boy Friend."

On Saturday the Order of the Coif national legal fraternity held induction ceremonies for the Class of 1986 in the Courtroom at 11 a.m. A social hour and box lunch at the School of Law preceded the Georgia-Vanderbilt game.

The Board of Visitors met on Friday at 11 a.m. and the LSA Council met at 9:30 a.m. on Saturday.

C. Alumni Seminar: The Bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution

The School of Law with the The University of Georgia Alumni Society sponsored the 1987 University of Georgia Alumni Seminar commemorating the Bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution. Dean J. Ralph Beaird and law professor Milner Ball chaired the seminar "A Bicentennial Celebration: Georgia's Impact on the U.S. Constitution" held at the Georgia Center February 13-15.

Former U.S. Attorney General Griffin Bell, Chief Justice Thomas O. Marshall of the Georgia Supreme Court, and U.S. Senator Wyche Fowler were among the speakers. Former U.S. Secretary of State Dean Rusk and former presidential adviser Robert Lipshutz also took part in the program which attracted approximately 350 participants.

Chief Judge John Godbold and Judge James C., Hill of the U.S. 11th Circuit Court of Appeals with Dean Beaird and Professor Robert Brussack discussed historic Supreme Court cases that originated in Georgia and had an effect on the Constitution. Justice Marshall introduced the session.

Sanford Levinson of the University of Texas School of Law delivered the keynote address entitled "The Constitution in Perspective." Fowler, Rusk and Lipshutz took part in a panel discussion on legal questions that have been interpreted by branches of government other than the courts. Professor Louis B. Sohn moderated the panel. Bell spoke on the Constitution bicentennial celebration.

A highlight of the seminar was a mock constitutional convention in which participants debated whether the U.S. Constitution should be changed and proposed possible new amendments to the Constitution. Issues such as abortion, the Equal Rights Amendment and a balanced federal budget were considered. Ball moderated the convention.

During the seminar participants gathered in small meetings led by Georgia faculty members to consider the issues that would be raised at the mock convention. The small groups formed states and elected representatives to speak for them at the convention. Their 13 groups represented the original 13 states that ratified the U.S. Constitution. Group leaders included law faculty members Albert Pearson, Thomas Eaton, Ronald Carlson, Paul Kurtz, Maxine Thomas, Samuel Davis, and Bertis Downs. Other Georgia faculty included Bernard Dauenhauer, philosophy; Robert Durant, Thomas Lauth and Susette Talarico, political science; Mike Nicholson, art; Peter Shedd, business; and Emory Thomas, history. Law alumnus Hamilton Lokey served as chairman of this year's Alumni Seminar.

D. Edith House Lecture

A pioneer in a new area of law practice offering alternatives to traditional litigation presented the fifth annual Edith House Lecture at the School of Law on Thursday, March 12 in the Law Auditorium. Antonia Handler Chayes, chairman of ENDISPUTE Inc. and a former under secretary of the U.S. Air Force, spoke on the topic "Beyond Negotiation: Alternative Dispute Resolution."

Chayes is a former partner in the Boston law firm of Csaplar & Bok. She is a magna cum laude graduate of Radcliffe College of Harvard University, and she attended Yale Law School and holds the juris doctor with highest honors degree from George Washington University.

E. Spring Sibley Lecture

James R. Browning, chief judge of the U.S. Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals, the largest unit in the federal judicial system, delivered the 67th John A. Sibley Lecture at the School of Law on April 15.

The lecture was the first held since Sibley's death at age 98 on October 28, 1987. Prior to Judge Browning's lecture, Dean J. Ralph Beaird presented a resolution in memory of Sibley to Mrs. Barbara Sibley, his widow. The law faculty adopted the resolution with "its profound respect, affection, and esteem for John A. Sibley and its deep regret at his death." The resolution cited the many career and public service accomplishments of the man credited with saving public education in Georgia and recognized Sibley's long and generous support of the University of Georgia School of Law. In 1964 Sibley himself introduced the first lecture in the series endowed by the Charles Loridans Foundation of Atlanta and named in his honor.

Daniel Fessler, professor of law at the University of California, Davis, and Browning's former law clerk, introduced the Spring, 1987 lecture. Fessler will join the Georgia faculty in the Fall as Distinguished Kilpatrick Visiting Professor of Law.

Browning spoke on "Judicial Review and Judicial Restraint." He was appointed judge of the Court of Appeals by President John F. Kennedy in 1961 and became chief judge in 1976. The Ninth Circuit encompasses the federal courts in eight western continental states as well as the state of Hawaii and the territories of Guam and the Northern Mariana Islands.

F. Law Day

U.S. Secretary of Transportation Elizabeth Dole was the speaker for the 1987 Law Day ceremonies April 25 honoring the Bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution. Sec. Dole spoke at 10 a.m. on the North Campus quadrangle at the Presidents Club Garden. A breakfast in her honor at the President's House hosted by Interim President and Mrs. Henry King Stanford preceded the ceremony.

In 1983 Dole was appointed to head the transportation department, a department with 100,000 employees and a budget of approximately $23 billion.

As secretary, she sets policy direction for the nation's aviation, highway, railroad, mass transit and maritime resources. She is the first woman to head a branch of the armed services--the U.S. Coast Guard--and the only woman on the Reagan cabinet.

Following the ceremony, a presentation of a portrait of J. Ralph Beaird took place in the Hatton Lovejoy Courtroom. LSA President Edward Killorin presented the portrait by artist Paul C. Burns to the School of Law. Michael J. Bowers, chairman of the Board of Visitors of the School of Law, served as master of ceremonies. The Hon. Harold G. Clarke of the Supreme Court of Georgia gave remarks on the career accomplishments and professional contributions of Beaird during his 13 years in the deanship. Beaird granddaughters Kristin and Meredith Scarboro unveiled the portrait which now hangs among former deans in the Law Library.

At the Law School Association luncheon following these ceremonies, Beaird received a Special Distinguished Service Award from the association. Distinguished Service Scroll recipients were alumni Charles H. Hyatt and Jule W. Felton, Jr.

Other Law Day events included: a Friday meeting of the Board of Visitors and a Saturday meeting of the Law School Association Council; the closing arguments of mock trial competition; presentation of student academic awards; a buffet at the State Botanical Garden of Georgia conservatory; a morning open house at the School of Law hosted by the first-year class; and a Saturday afternoon and evening reunion of the Class of 1976 at Flinchum's Phoenix Lodge.

G. Commencement

The University of Georgia School of Law awarded 176 degrees at graduation exercises May 16. U.S. Representative Charles F. Hatcher, who represents Georgia's 2nd Congressional District, spoke at the 11 a.m. ceremonies on the North Campus quadrangle. Hatcher is a 1969 graduate of the law school. Interim President Henry King Stanford conferred the Juris Doctor degree on graduates. In addition the law school recognized 12 students from six foreign countries who completed requirements in the Graduate Legal Studies Program for the Master of Laws degree. Dean Beaird presented the J.D. degrees. As dean he has presented 2,645 law degrees--more degrees than any other dean in the history of the law school. More than half of the living alumni of the law school received degrees during Beaird's tenure.

James L. Milner, president of the law Class of 1987, was master of ceremonies. The Rev. Dr. Joseph L. Roberts, Jr., pastor of Ebenezer Baptist Church in Atlanta and father of Cynthia Roberts, a member of the graduating class, gave the invocation. Judge Marion T. Pope, Jr. of the Georgia Court of Appeals and a 1953 graduate of the School of Law, welcomed the graduates into the school's alumni organization. Honorary marshals, chosen from the faculty by the third-year law class, were Larry E. Blount and Paul M. Kurtz.

VIII. ALUMNI RELATIONS

A. The Law School Association

1. The Law School Association Council held its annual fall meeting Saturday, October 18. President Edward Killorin was chairman for the meeting.

2. The Law School Association's Law Day luncheon was held April 25 at the Holiday Inn of Athens. A brief meeting of the council was held following the luncheon. The 1987-88 budget for the Law School fund was approved for recommendation to the entire Association.

3. The Law School Association scheduled its two annual breakfasts in conjunction with the State Bar of Georgia meetings. One was held January 8 at the Ritz-Carlton-Buckhead hotel in Atlanta. Larry Walker, president-elect for 1986-87, was installed as president and took office at the annual meeting held June 12 in Savannah. Other officers elected were: Clifford Adams, president-elect; Verner Chaffin, secretary and Gary Blasingame, treasurer.

4. The Washington, D. C. chapter of the Law School Association held a reception January 15 in the conference room of the law firm of Steptoe and Johnson. Cherie Taylor, a 1983 alumna, made arrangements for the reception.

5. In February, the Law School Association hosted a luncheon for members of the General Assembly who are Georgia law graduates. Invited were alumni who serve in all three branches of state government.

6. The Law School Alumni Office assisted planning groups in the arrangements for class reunions during the spring season. The Class of 1976 met during the Law Day weekend in April, and the reunion was coordinated by Robert Brussack.

B. Board of Visitors

The Law School Board of Visitors held its fall meeting on October 17, 1986. The winter meeting was held just before the luncheon with Georgia legislators on February 18. The group met during the Law Day weekend for its spring meeting April 24. Attorney General Michael Bowers was elected to the chairmanship of the Board for 1987. New members joining the Board of Visitors at its winter meeting were Ray Barnes of Marietta, Judge Robert Benham of Atlanta and Cartersville, and Barbara Mendel Mayden of New York.

IX. PRIVATE FUNDS DEVELOPMENT

A. Law School Fund Campaign

The class challenge campaign is in its second year of operation. Representatives from 45 classes contacted their classmates and asked them to give to the Law School Fund or law-related accounts in the annual giving program this year.

The end-of-June figures for the Law School Fund show the dollar amount increasing by eight percent over the comparable period last year. The Law School Fund received $169,335. The number of donors to the Fund decreased slightly from last year's total. There were 868 donors as of the end of June this year, compared to 1,018 last year. The reason for this could be that the "newness" had worn off for the class solicitors who were serving as agents for the second year, and they were less likely to contact their classmates a second time to urge them to give. For next year's campaign, a new set of solicitors will be recruited in order to take advantage of fresh approaches and ideas.

The percentage of participation in annual giving by law alumni averaged 13 per cent for law related accounts, and there was an overall participation rate of 25 per cent for law graduates giving to all accounts of The University of Georgia Foundation. This means that approximately 1,149 of our graduates gave to the University, but did not earmark their gifts for the Law School. We still have a task ahead in encouraging our graduates to make their gifts for purposes related to the Law School.

B. Capital Gifts Campaign

From July 1, 1986 through June 30, 1987, the School of Law received $762,838 in cash gifts. This amount included $169,335 in gifts to the Law School Fund, $332,717 in gifts to law-related accounts other than the Law School Fund, and 260,786 in pledge payments to Law School endowed accounts.

New pledges created in 1986-87 included 780,000 in announced gifts which will come in the years ahead. Also, several Presidents Club memberships carried bequests for deferred gifts.

In summary, the total amount of new value added to the Law School endowment in 1986-87 was $1,542,838. When added to the value of the endowment as it stood on July 1, 1986, the new figure is $16,059,425.

Several of these newly-established funds or new gift additions are highlighted:

1. John A. Sibley Chair Addition

Announced in early June was the intention of the Metropolitan Foundation of Atlanta to provide a $500,000 gift to the John A. Sibley professorship in corporate law. The Foundation, an outgrowth of Robert Woodruff's generosity, had made the initial gift of $250,000 to establish the chair 18 months ago. It honors Woodruff's longtime friend and former general counsel of the Coca-Cola Company, John Sibley.

An additional gift of $250,000 is anticipated from other sources, which it will bring the amount of the Sibley Chair up to $1 million. The actual grant from the Metropolitan Foundation will be made sometime in the fourth quarter of 1987 (sometime after October).

2. The Allen Post Professorship

Memorial gifts honoring the late Allen Post formed the basis for an endowed professorship which was created last year but received funds development emphasis in 1986-87. Allen Post, Jr. and his mother, Mrs. Chastaine Post, made gifts to the fund, as did members of the law firm of Hansell and Post. A committee within the law firm headed by Travis

Brandon worked with development officer Frank Brookins in carrying out a campaign to raise funds among Mr. Post's many friends and business associates. By June 30, the gifts and pledges amounted to $248,266.

Allen Post graduated from The University of Georgia as an undergraduate in 1927 where he was valedictorian. He was elected a Rhodes Scholar and he earned degrees in jurisprudence at Oxford. His practice in Atlanta covered the fields of libel, banking, probate, transportation, utilities and criminal law.

3. Carter Chair

An additional gift of $130,746 was made to the Marion and W. Colquitt Carter Chair by the Carter family in January. This brings the total amount in the Carter Chair Fund to $443,698.

4. Georgia Journal of International and Comparative Law Endowment

A bequest which came to the Law School this year through the work of Statesboro alumnus Francis Allen became the basis for a new endowment fund to support the work of the Georgia Journal. The impetus for the fund stemmed from the effort of two former Journal staff members and the publication's faculty advisor. Kenneth Klein and Terry Smith, both of the Class of 1976, joined with Professor Gabriel Wilner to solicit former editorial board members for gifts. Klein and Smith joined the Presidents Club, as did Charles Hunnicutt, editor-in-chief for 1977. The Journal endowment campaign received $12,222 in cash from 42 donors in its first six months of existence.

5. Carl Sanders Law Library Fund

A gift of $25,000 by Carl E. Sanders established a fund with the University of Georgia Foundation which benefits the law library. Sanders, a 1948 graduate, was Governor of Georgia in 1963-67 and he has served as president of the Law School Association Council and chairman of the Board of Visitors.

He anticipates making future gifts to the library endowment fund. The library is especially important for him, for it was Sanders and Board of Regents Chairman James Dunlap who persuaded the Georgia Legislature to appropriate special "catch-up" funding for the library in the mid-1960's.

6. Judge Kelley Quillian Memorial Fund

A committee headed by Edward Killorin and James Paris was formed last fall for the purpose of soliciting gifts to establish a memorial fund honoring Judge Kelley Quillian, who died in May, 1986. The committee, through Gwen Wood's office, sent letters of solicitation to the Workers' Compensation Section of the State Bar of Georgia; and to those who graduated in the mid-1950's and knew Quillian from Law school days.

Quillian was judge on the Georgia Court of Appeals for 18 years. He became an expert in workers' compensation law.

C. Presidents Club Membership Campaign

Development officer Frank Brookins undertook a campaign to increase the number of law alumni and associates who give or pledge at the $10,000 and above level. This is the Presidents Club of The University of Georgia Foundation.

Since July 1, 1986, the UGA Foundation enrolled 13 new Presidents Club members with gifts designated for the Law School.

X. PHYSICAL PLANT

A. Current Structures

In addition to the main law building complex, the School of Law utilized several other structures in 1986-87:

1. Law Library Annex, north campus quadrangle.
2. Waddel Hall, north campus quadrangle -- home of the Dean Rusk Center for International and Comparative Law.
3. Athens Legal Aid and Defender Society -- office in Saye Building on North Lumpkin Street.
4. Joseph Henry Lumpkin House - headquarters of ICLE.

B. Acquisitions, Repairs and Renovations

In the summer of 1986, the Joseph Henry Lumpkin House on Prince Avenue was deeded over to the Law School Association, which in turn leased it to the Institute of Continuing Legal Education. The Institute converted the upper floor into offices for the director, assistant director, program coordinator, staff attorney, and secretary. The anteroom next to the East Parlor was converted into an office, and additional office space was added when the east porch was removed and a room built to take its place. The dining room, hall, and east and west parlors remain the same with the antique furnishings. These are the public rooms which will continue to be used for meetings, receptions, and functions of the Law School Association. ICLE furnished the upstairs with office furniture in mahogany and cherry period reproductions in order to preserve the decor of the house. Draperies were custom-made for the downstairs windows and they were fitted with wooden blinds. On the exterior, the untreated lumber was removed from around the eaves and porches and replaced. The exterior was repainted and the roof resurfaced. The lot was graded and a new parking area paved, and the entire area was landscaped.

The new printing building on the back portion of the lot is a one-story stucco structure which houses the printing and shelving equipment for the production of texts and workbooks. Staff offices and a classroom equipped for teleconferencing are also a part of the building, which was named in honor of A.G. Cleveland, principal founder of the Institute of Continuing Legal Education.

C. Other improvements

The five offices vacated by ICLE in the Law Library Annex were readied for use by faculty members in the summer of 1987.

The Legal Aid Clinic prepared to move its offices from the Saye Building to the College Avenue Building (upper floor of old Varsity Building) on July 1, 1987.

Reports from each program unit were prepared by the unit directors for inclusion in this Annual Report. Fran Thomas, Public Information Director, was general editor of the report.
