Chester Davenport - A Defining Moment

The founder and managing director of Georgetown Partners is Chester Davenport

(LL.B.'66), a man who loves making deals. After all, this is what he does for a living. Davenport's multi-million dollar private equity leverage buyout firm has owned and operated companies such as Envirotech Systems Corporation, the world's leading provider of auto emissions testing systems. In addition, he has a history of making sound business decisions in the worlds of real estate, telecommunications and politics.

After graduating from the School of Law, Davenport embarked on a very successful business career that started with a stint in the Tax Division at the U.S. Department of Justice. He then worked for California Senator Alan Cranston, created a mortgage-banking business and practiced law in his own firm. In the mid-1970s, he played a significant role in the Carter-Mondale election campaign and, during Carter's presidential term, he served as assistant secretary for policy, plans and international affairs in the Department of Transportation. In the late 1980s, Davenport established Georgetown Partners.

Davenport believes his decision to attend the University of Georgia School of Law in the fall of 1963 is one of the defining moments in his life. This highly successful entrepreneur had his choice of the nation's leading law schools to attend, including those in the ivy league, but chose Georgia because he felt a sense of duty to be the first African American to attend the legal institution. "It was the thing for me to do," he said. "Someone needed to be the first, and I had the capabilities."

"You can do a lot more [in life] than you think you can," Davenport said. Judging from the success of this African-American male born in humble circumstances in Athens, GA, this is true. He credits his success today to the support he received from his parents and his family.

Charles Driebe Jr. - Making Music

There's no business like show business, and Charles Driebe Jr. (J.D. '82) knows it first hand. He is an entertainment lawyer and manager of the gospel group The Blind Boys of Alabama.

Driebe's involvement with the music industry began while he was earning his undergraduate degree at Tulane University, where he was a DJ, and eventually program director, at the college's radio station. After coming to Athens to study law, he became friends with the members of the band R.E.M. and "booked their first gig in Atlanta for the grand sum of $250," he said.

After practicing as a litigator for 10 years, Driebe decided to get more involved in his "first love," music. He began studying entertainment law and eventually expanded to managing musical artists. "I was interested in music first, last and always," Driebe said.

He became the manager of The Blind Boys of Alabama in 2001 and finds the work both challenging and rewarding. "Music management encompasses a host of different functions - planning, marketing, strategizing, promoting and networking to name a few," he said. "It is also personally more fulfilling as I enjoy being involved in all aspects of an artist's career."

During his management tenure, The Blind Boys of Alabama have won two Grammy Awards, played at the White House and appeared on numerous national television shows including "The Tonight Show with Jay Leno" and "The Late Show with David Letterman."

"My favorite part of my current job is those brief moments when I can sit back and enjoy The Blind Boys performing live. I've seen them perform at least a hundred times but they are always inspiring," he said.

Ruth Knox - Fulfilling Her Dream

At a party she attended many years ago, where someone asked what her dream job would be, Ruth Knox (J.D.'78) answered that she would like to be the president of Wesleyan College, her undergraduate alma mater in Macon, GA. "That was just wishful thinking on my part at the time," she said. But in January 2003, that dream became a reality.

"I certainly have not followed the traditional career path of someone who aspired to be a college president," Knox said. "I had always admired my father [Robert Knox, LL.B.'38] and the kind of law practice he operated." So after earning her undergraduate degree in English from Wesleyan, she decided to pursue a Juris Doctor from Georgia Law.

Knox said earning her law degree helped her develop many of the skills that are useful to her as a college president. "Law, of course, is at its heart a profession of service to others, which certainly is a guiding value for Wesleyan College and for me personally."

Following graduation from law school, Knox maintained a private law practice while serving in various capacities at Wesleyan, including the chair of the board of trustees for several years. "My love and support for Wesleyan never wavered," she said.

As president, Knox handles many responsibilities including planning efforts for the future, recruiting new students, fundraising, meeting with alumnae all over the country and "spreading the good word about this wonderful college." When asked what her greatest challenge as president is, she answered, "that one is simple – never enough time!"
