UGA Alumna

Judge Carnes Presiding

By Jean Cleveland

Julie E. Carnes (J.D. '75) joined an elite club May 29; she was sworn in as one of 54 women to serve as a U.S. District Court judge and only the second woman to be appointed as a federal district court judge in Georgia.

Carnes, who spent the previous two years as a member of the U.S. Sentencing Commission, becomes the first female UGA law school graduate to serve on the federal bench. There are only 181 women serving as judges in federal courts nationwide.

"Ms. Carnes compiled a superb record when she was in law school. She clearly possesses a first-rate legal mind," said Dean Ron Ellington. "She is one of the very top graduates that this law school has produced in the 20-plus years that I have been a faculty member. Ms. Carnes is a person with strength of character, excellent intuition, and seasoned judgment. I know also that she is a person of the highest integrity and honor. She has the ability to make an outstanding contribution as a judge."

Her time with the sentencing commission will be a valuable asset in her new job, Carnes said.

"All federal judges are required to use the guidelines administered by the sentencing commission, and the fact that I have gained that experience hopefully will make me a better judge," she said.

Having traveled the country to meet with judges and conduct training sessions is also an asset. "I've met a lot of judges and they have been very helpful to me in molding my own philosophy."

She credits President George Bush with increasing "greatly the number of women picked

From the Dean

This past year has seen some of the best, and worst, of times. Because of a state budget shortfall, the Law School budget was reduced by $250,000. We had to do a lot of belt-tightening and we could not do some things that we would have liked, such as publishing the Georgia Advocate regularly, but we have protected the core of the educational program. We had this year the thrill of winning the National Moot Court Championship, and we had a successful reaccreditation visit by the American Bar Association/Association of American Law Schools.

On Law Day, April 11, we celebrated the $5 million addition to the Law School complex with a ceremonial groundbreaking. The new building, on which construction should start this summer, will give us state-of-the-art facilities as we seek to prepare today's law students to practice law well into the 21st century. This facility is not being built so that the Law School can increase in size; its purpose is to help us do a better job with our present-size enrollment in carrying out our work of teaching, research and service.

Our Admissions Committee is putting the finishing touches on the new first-year class that will begin school next month. We received a record number of applications—more than 2,500—for the 200 seats in the class. There is now a new LSAT scale (120-180) that replaces the almost-familiar scale of 10-48. We expect

Rindskopf Gives Spring Sibley Lecture

Elizabeth R. Rindskopf, general counsel to the Central Intelligence Agency, presented the law school's spring semester John A. Sibley Lecture March 4.

The eighth general counsel for the CIA, Rindskopf spoke on "Law and Intelligence: Thoughts on Its Past, Present and Future," examining the CIA's role in the post-Cold War era.

Roger Wilson, a 1989 law school graduate and personal friend of Rindskopf, facilitated her appearance on campus.

Prior to joining the CIA in April 1990, Rindskopf served as the principal deputy legal advisor at the Department of State. From 1984 to 1989, she held the appointment of general counsel at the National Security Agency. While at NSA, Rindskopf was responsible for all legal work of the agency, including several major espionage cases.

In the early 1980s, Rindskopf was in private practice at a Washington, D.C., law firm where she was involved in federal litigation and international arbitration, principally before the Iran-U.S. Claims Tribunal in The Hague. She also served with the Federal Trade Commission, handling antitrust investigations and litigation before eventually becoming the assistant director for mergers and joint ventures.

Following her graduation from the University of Michigan law school in 1968, Rindskopf worked with Emory Community Legal Services in Atlanta and later with Georgia Legal Services, handling a wide variety of federal litigation. In 1971, she joined the Atlanta firm of Moore, Alexander and Rindskopf, where she handled a large number of civil rights matters as a co-operating counsel with the NAACP Legal Defense Education Fund.

The John A. Sibley Lecture Series was established at the law school in 1964 by the Charles Loidans Foundation of Atlanta to bring outstanding legal scholars of national reputation to the school.

The series honors the late John A. Sibley, a 1911 graduate of the University of Georgia School of Law, who served for many years as chairman of the board of the Trust Company of Georgia. ■

International Conference Deals With Trade in 90's

The compatibility of regional trading blocks with the GATT (General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade) countries was the focus of an international conference April 9 and 10.

"The World Trading System in the 1990s" studied the effects of the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement and the likelihood of a similar agreement with Mexico. Also discussed were the repercussions of the development of the European Community and the fall of communism in eastern Europe.

Economic issues have replaced political ones since the fall of communism, former Secretary of State Dean Rusk, Samuel H. Sibley Professor of International Law Emeritus, said in opening remarks.

The conference was designed to provide the legal and business community with information and materials on the future of world trade.

The European economic future, the North American Free Trade Area and Pacific

Rim regionalism were the topics of three panels.

Participating in the discussions, in addition to law professors and political scientists from the university, were representatives of the GATT, Canada, Mexico and Japan.

The Dean Rusk Center for International and Comparative Law, the Georgia Journal of International and Comparative Law, ICLE, the American Society of International Law and the Ford Foundation co-sponsored the conference. ■

Professionalism and Ethics Seminar Presents Challenges, Responsibilities

Chief Justice Harold Clarke of the Supreme Court of Georgia was the keynote speaker at a conference on professionalism and ethics co-sponsored by the law school, the Defense Research Institute and ICLE March 6.

Attorneys and judges made presentations on topics including discovery abuse, business lawyer conduct and rules for the courtroom.

Judge Duross Fitzpatrick of the U.S. District Court, Middle District of Georgia (J.D. '66), and G. Bland Byrne III of the Atlanta law firm Swift, Currie, McGhee and Hiers, made presentations along with lawyers from other parts of the country.

The UGA law school was one of two schools in the country receiving grants from the Defense Research Institute to conduct the seminar.

"The program was designed for law students, practicing attorneys and members of the judiciary who are confronted on a daily basis with the challenges, stresses, temptations and responsibilities inherent in the life of a practicing lawyer," said Ronald L. Carlson, the John Byrd Martin Professor of Law. "The erosion of an understanding of the ethical principles or practice methods has created an unacceptable practice environment among certain members of the legal profession. This was an opportunity to step back and look at ourselves and evaluate our conduct for the benefit of those who will follow." ■

1992 Edith House Lecture

Patricia J. Williams of the University of Wisconsin law school addressed reproductive rights as the speaker for the 1992 Edith House Lecture in March.

Williams spoke on "Banished Bodies," focusing on the Johnson Controls case decided last year by the U.S. Supreme Court, which held that an employer's policy of barring all women capable of childbearing from certain jobs was discriminatory.

Williams also covered some material from her recent book, The Alchemy of Race and Rights.

A 1975 graduate of the Harvard University School of Law, where she was articles editor of the Black Law Journal and a member of the Harvard Civil Rights and Civil Liberties Law Review, Williams previously was on the faculty at Golden Gate law school and City University of New York at Queens law school.

She is a member of the board of governors of the Society of American Law Teachers, a member of the board of advisors for the Center for Constitutional Rights and a member of the board of editors of Signs, a journal of women in culture and history.

Edith House, a native of Winder, Ga., was co-valetorian of the Class of 1925 and was one of two female graduates in the first class to graduate women from the University's School of Law. Following her graduation, she practiced law for four years in Clearwater, Fla. She was then appointed assistant U.S. attorney for the Southern District of Florida, a post she held for the next 30 years. She died in 1987.

The annual lecture is sponsored by the Women Law Students Association. ■

Patricia Williams of the University of Wisconsin chose reproductive rights as her topic when she delivered the 1992 Edith House Lecture this spring.

Wilner Named Associate Dean

Gabriel M. Wilner, Thomas M. Kirbo Professor of Law, will assume the duties of associate dean and director of International and Graduate Legal Studies upon his return to the law school in the fall.

In connection with this position, Wilner also will serve ex officio as associate executive director of the Dean Rusk Center for International and Comparative Law.

His responsibilities will include coordinating the regular international and transnational curriculum, courses given at the law school by guest and adjunct faculty in the field of international law, and international faculty and student outreach programs.

"For many years Gabe Wilner has played a key role in building a rich and wide effort in international studies in the law school," said Dean Ron Ellington. "The time has come to bring more focus and coordination to this important area of our academic program, and I am pleased that Wilner has agreed to serve in this role."

Wilner founded the Brussels Seminar on the Law and Institutions of the European Community with the support of Dean Rusk and will guide the 1992 session, the 20th anniversary of the seminar. He plans an alumni colloquium in Brussels to commemorate the occasion. A feature on the seminar and its anniversary will appear in the fall issue of the Georgia Advocate.

Wilner also coordinates the Course of Study on the Law of the United States, a program funded by the Brussels Bar that flies members of the law school faculty to Brussels each May to teach courses in their areas of expertise.

"Part of my work is encouraging the work of my colleagues in international and transnational law. I will continue as faculty advisor to the Georgia Journal of International and Comparative Law and the International Law Society," Wilner commented. "I will be seeking to put together projects in collaboration with colleagues and will continue to advise the student organizations. In connection with this I will seek to obtain further grants for the International and Graduate Legal Studies programs that will benefit faculty, students and the institution."

Wilner said he is looking forward to working with the Rusk Center's executive director and staff in pursuing the center's research and service mission and in furthering efforts to tie together the law school's academic program and the work of the Rusk Center.

"I am very pleased to be returning to Georgia where I have spent the principal part of my teaching career. I am eager to return to the classroom where I will be teaching the foundation course on international law. I also am looking forward to working with many old and newer friends at the Law Library, at the law school itself and among alumni and friends of the law school," he said. "I am particularly delighted that I will be continuing to work with Mrs. Raye Smith, who will be the senior administrative secretary to International and Graduate Legal Studies."

"I believe the law school has a great future as a national center for international and transnational law studies and I will continue to devote my efforts to that aim. I am well aware of the crucial importance of the interest that Dean Ellington and his colleagues take in the international and transnational dimensions of the law school's mission."

Wilner is a graduate of the College of William and Mary, the University of Exeter in England and Columbia University, where he received his LL.B. and LL.M. He also did graduate legal work at the Free University of Brussels (ULB) and has been the director of studies at the Hague Academy of International Law. Wilner has taught at a number of universities, including Emory, Florida State, Antwerp, Amsterdam, Lyon-Jean Moulin, and the ULB, and he is an adjunct professor at the Vrije Universiteit Brussel.

Wilner has worked for the United Nations as a member of the Office of Legal Affairs, as legal counsel at the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), and as a legal consultant to the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) and the United Nations Commission on Transnational Corporations. He has counseled developing country governments and regional organizations on issues of economic development law, investment and technology law. He also has been an international arbitration law associate at the American Arbitration Association, and he spent several years in the private practice of international transactions. Wilner was the principal drafter of the Georgia Arbitration Code, which made Georgia the first state to include a section on international arbitration.

Wilner joined the law school faculty in 1973 and was named the Thomas Kirbo Professor of Law and director of Graduate Legal Studies in 1985. He has directed the Brussels Seminar on the Law and Institutions of the European Communities since its inception.

Wilner has published in the fields of public international law, international economic law, conflict of laws, comparative law, commercial arbitration, European Community law, technology transfer and admiralty. He has also taught in these areas, as well as in areas of international trade law and international organizations. ■

Moot Court Victories

The moot court team of Marc Howard and Dawn Luzier are headed to compete at the ABA National Convention against a field of the top 20 teams in the country.

Howard and Luzier captured first place in the ABA's National Appellate Advocacy Competition for the southeastern region in March. Eighteen teams represented 12 southern law schools.

"This marks the fifth consecutive year that Georgia has reached the national finals in this competition," said Jere Morehead, moot court team faculty advisor.

Luzier also was named Best Oral Advocate in the competition and the team placed second for Best Brief.

The Moot Court Program posted a 30-7 record, closing out the 1991-92 season with the Intrastate Competition and the Giles Sutherland Rich Patent Competition.

In the Intrastate Competition, sponsored by the Younger Lawyers Section of the State Bar of Georgia, each of the four state law schools enter two teams.

"Since three of those law schools have won the national championship over the past five years, using six individuals from this competition, it typically proves to be one of the most rigorous second-year competitions in the country. This year was no exception," Morehead said.

The loss of three-tenths point (on a 200-point scale) in the opening round led to the Giles Sutherland Rich team falling in a single elimination regional competition, Morehead said.

The UGA team competing in the Jessup International Law Moot Court Competition scored a perfect 4-0 record in preliminary round competition before falling in a close final round, leaving them first runner-up in the southeastern region. Team member Joan Gabel received the first runner-up award for Best Oralist in the competition. ■

Second-year law student litigators Edward C. Henderson and Kristen J. Indermark captured the school's 1992 Spring Intramural Mock Trial Competition and were honored by the Georgia chapter of the American Board of Trial Advocates (ABOTA). Henderson and Indermark received engraved plaques from the national trial advocacy organization at Law Day UGA student award ceremonies April 10.

Henderson and Indermark received congratulations from U.S. Magistrate Judge John R. Strother Jr., who judged the final round of the competition, and Dean Ron Ellington. Finalists in the mock trial competition, James W. Crowson and Holmes J. Hawkins, also received engraved plaques from ABOTA. ■

Order of the Coif Inducts New Members

Twenty-three 1991 law graduates were inducted into the Order of the Coif, the top national scholastic honor society in legal education, this past fall.

The legal profession's equivalent of Phi Beta Kappa, the Order of the Coif honors academic and scholarly excellence. Membership is reserved for the top 10 percent of each graduating class.

Those inducted were Douglas Arnold, Merritt Blakeslee, Timothy Gibbons, Laura Hauck, Kerry Howell, Duane Preston and Nancy Ryan, all of Athens; William Barkley, Jaime Briggs, Karen Crenshaw, Homer Layson and Marine Ortega of Atlanta; Michael Pruett of Bethlehem; Traci Green of Columbus; Sarah Estes and Melanie Sherk of Decatur; Jeffrey Coleman of Dublin; Christopher Galanek of Dunwoody; Larry Oldham of Gainesville; Christopher House of Rome; Jackson Sherrill of Savannah; Jeffrey Iddings of Greensboro, N.C.; and Mark Steirer of Clemson, S.C.

Drawn from the tradition of British barrister societies, the American Order of the Coif was founded in 1902 to promote scholarship among law students. The University of Georgia was granted institutional membership in the American Order of the Coif in 1977, the 57th law school to hold that distinction in the United States.

Julian B. McDonnell, Sibley Professor of Law, is president of the local chapter; Associate Dean Paul M. Kurtz is secretary and Samuel M. Davis, the Allen Post Professor of Law, vice president. ■

LL.M. Alumni Meet in Paris

The second annual LL.M. Alumni Association meeting was held in Paris in July 1991.

More than 20 alumni from various European countries attended the event, which included business discussions and social events. It was organized by Renaud Baguenault de Puchesse ('89).

David Serkin, an attorney with Simpson, Thacher and Bartlett in New York City who is practicing in Paris, presented his views comparing the European law practice to the New York practice of his firm.

After an afternoon of sightseeing via boat on the Seine, a reception was held in the garden of an old mansion on the Champs de Mars just below the Eiffel tower. Following dinner, association President Bernd Thalmann addressed the gathering and announced that the third annual LL.M. alumni meeting is set for July 18-20 in Bonn. Andreas Knaut ('87) is organizing the event. ■

Paige Otwell Haines (J.D. '88), director of the Georgia Civil Justice Foundation, presents Dean Ron Ellington with a $50,000 check to endow a scholarship fund for students with demonstrated trial advocacy skills. ■

First-Year Students Demonstrate Client Counseling Skills

The Client Counseling Team placed second in the February Southeast Regional Competition held in Miami.

Team members Derek Dooley, Page Pate and alternate Clay Powell, first-year law students, were coached by Mike Rose, a second-year student and a former coach/teacher at Cedar Shoals High School in Athens.

Miami Law School won the competition, which consists of each team randomly selecting three of six possible scenarios and a panel of three judges separately scoring each completed segment.

"I was really impressed by the level of dedication and preparation Clay, Page and Derek put into this competition," Rose said. "This certainly bodes well for their future as attorneys and for the mock trial and moot court programs of the law school."

The UGA law school is the only school in the competition that sends a team of first-year students to compete. Other schools send teams of second-year students.

"We purposefully keep this competition open to just first-year law students at Georgia so as to impress upon the first-year students that there are other aspects of lawyering than trial work or litigation," said Thomas A. Eaton, the 1991-92 law school client counseling faculty co-advisor. ■

Red Clay Conference

The fourth annual Red Clay Conference on Environmental Law was held in April, emphasizing environmental law in the public interest.

Sponsored by the UGA Environmental Law Association, the two-day conference focused on both general education concerning environmental issues and legal protection and rights. More than 30 speakers led discussions in 17 panels on such topics as grassroots environmentalism, endangered species, wetlands, current legislative developments, toxic waste, coastal development, recycling, agricultural issues, forest management and land trusts.

Opening remarks were made by Judge Mark Dickerson, the Georgia environmental administrative law judge. Other speakers included representatives of the Environmental Protection Agency, Procter and Gamble, state agencies and private law firms.

The Environmental Law Association, the second largest organization at the law school, is a non-profit student organization whose goal is to promote awareness of environmental issues. ■ that the median LSAT score for the first-year class will be at the 90th percentile nationally, and that the class will have earned a college grade point average of 3.4. We will enroll a first-year class that is both highly talented academically and filled with men and women who have demonstrated personal characteristics of leadership and public-mindedness.

Despite a faculty salary scale that badly lags compared to that at peer schools, we have been able (so far) to avoid faculty defections to other schools, and we have added new faculty who have already proven their commitment to teaching and scholarship. Our faculty is involved in law at the highest levels in this country as scholars and as active participants. We can all note with pride that two members of the faculty argued cases before the United States Supreme Court this term.

We will go into the 1992-93 academic year with a state budget base that carries forward the 5 percent reduction of last year. Our new budget does, however, contain much-needed increased funding for faculty and staff salaries and for the Law Library. Although our budget is not yet restored to its previous level, next year will be noticeably better than this year, and, with the state economy improving, the future looks promising.

We weathered this past year because of the private contributions Law School alumni and friends have given in the past. This year's annual fund drive has gone well despite the economic climate, but we still need your support. As of May 27, unrestricted contributions to the Law School Fund exceeded $155,000. Our goal is to raise $200,000 a year, so please help us finish strong and conclude this year's campaign successfully by making as generous a gift to the Law School Fund as you can. The better we become as a Law School, the higher the expectations of what is attainable.

A law school is more than brick, glass and mortar, and it is more than budgets and fund raising. Those are important concerns, but they are secondary to the people who together and over time are the real law school—the students, faculty and staff, and alumni and friends. As a human institution, the Law School grows and evolves.

I have now served five years as dean. After considerable thought about when I should conclude my deanship, I informed President Knapp and the faculty that I will step down as dean at the end of one more year, in the summer 1993. I look forward to returning to what I enjoy most, teaching here at Georgia.

A search committee will be formed this summer to identify apt candidates, both from within the present faculty and from outside, for the deanship. That process will unfold over the fall so that, by the early spring of 1993, a new dean will be selected.

I look forward to continuing to work on behalf of the Law School this coming year as dean and thereafter as a member of the faculty. As in the past, I know I can count on your continued friendship and support.

Ron Ellington
Dean

Admissions

The Entering Law Class of 1992 promises to be one of the most talented ever to enroll. With more than 90% of the admissions offers having been made, the average undergraduate grade point average (GPA) of those accepted applicants who have placed a deposit to reserve a seat in the class is 3.4 and the Law School Admission Test (LSAT) score average is 163.

In selecting a class of 200 students, the Admissions Committee and staff have had to deal not only with a record number of applications (2,563—an 8% increase over last year's total), but also with a new LSAT scoring scale. Beginning with the June 1991 test, the new scale range is from 120 to 180. To put the 163 for the entering class in perspective: 89.7% of the current test takers have scored below 163; 89.6% of the test takers from 1982-1991 scored below 41.

Many prospective students (and parents) inquire about the best time to take the LSAT. The LSAT is given only four times a year: June, October, December and February. For the typical applicant who is a college student, the June test following the junior year and October test of the senior year are generally agreed to be the best. December and February should be viewed as alternate dates in the event health conditions or other circumstances interfere with taking the test in June or October.

An important note: many schools, including Georgia, use the average of scores when an applicant has taken the test two or more times. Thus, it is important to take the test with the intention of taking it only once and be as well prepared as possible. ■

Alumni Programs and Development

The 1991-92 academic year proved to be both a challenging and a busy one, not only for the Alumni Programs and Development Office, but for the entire law school community. Striving to maintain the high quality of the school's academic program as well as the co-curricular activities during a year when the law school saw its budget reduced by $250,000 due to state budget reductions challenged both the creativity and resourcefulness of faculty, administrators, staff and students. Support from alumni and friends of the law school during this difficult year came not only in the form of contributions to the Law School Fund, but also as telephone calls and letters of encouragement.

As the primary office responsible for fund raising for the law school, the alumni office spent a great deal of time this year in reaching out to alumni and law school friends to request financial support to make up the budget deficit. My staff and I, along with the rest of the law school community, are grateful to those alumni and friends who responded generously to requests for contributions to the 1991-92 Law School Fund Campaign, which helped to ameliorate the law school's budget reductions.

Law School Association Council (LSA) representatives, led by LSA President Julius Hulsey, worked diligently on behalf of the law school by contacting fellow graduates this past spring to encourage them to make a gift before June 30, the end of the 1991-92 fund-raising year. The response to the LSA Council representatives' letters was gratifying.

The need for private support from alumni and friends of the law school was certainly underscored this past year. During times of difficulty, the law school must rely on its graduates and friends to help it through. Given the vagaries of state funding, it is critical for the law school to have a continuing and increasing level of private financial support to safeguard its hard-won gains and to ensure it will meet the aspirations of its graduates for the future.

While fund raising was the primary focus for the alumni office last year, there were a number of law school special events and alumni events that the office coordinated. The most recent event was the annual LSA alumni reception and breakfast meeting, held in conjunction with the State Bar of Georgia in Savannah June 18 and 19. More than 200 people attended the cocktail reception in the Plimsoll Club of the Hyatt Regency, and, while it was crowded at times, it was great to see so many Georgia law graduates together.

During the LSA breakfast meeting, Julius Hulsey of Gainesville stepped down as LSA president and John S. Noell Jr. of Athens was installed as the 1992-93 LSA president. Marvin H. Zion of Decatur was voted president-elect, Gary Blasingame was re-elected treasurer and Verner F. Chaffin was re-elected secretary.

As always, alumni and friends are invited to contact us regarding ideas or suggestions for events that the alumni office may help sponsor. We look forward with enthusiasm to the start of the 1992-93 year, and, again, we thank you for the support received this past year. ■

Student Affairs

Tradition and innovation have reigned at the School of Law during the 1991-92 academic year. Reflecting the great diversity of students at the law school, student organizations have led the way in co-curricular and extra-curricular activities.

Tradition is represented by student sponsorship of social activities such as legal fraternity pre-game mixers, Student Bar Association semester-end celebrations, and the fun but meaningful annual Student Bar Association Faculty Auction. Intramural football, basketball, and softball continue to be popular and hotly contested. The Barrister's Ball remains a popular event.

The Federalist Society is revived and is quite active in promoting conservative and libertarian viewpoints. A relatively new organization, on the other hand, is the Informed Student Coalition. With a progressive political view, members of ISC are concerned with social issues such as gender preference and race relations. The Women Law Students' Association, Black Law Student Association, Christian Legal Society, and Jewish Law Student Network also contribute to the School of Law as a "marketplace of ideas."

Major speeches or conferences have been sponsored by WLSA, the Environmental Law Society, the Georgia Society of International and Comparative Law, and the Intellectual Property Club, in addition to the Sibley Lectures. All contributed to the education of participants and enhanced the reputation of the School of Law.

The Equal Justice Foundation, which raises money for public interest clerkships, is not alone in its altruistic efforts. Most student organizations this year sponsored projects in behalf of others. These included raising money and volunteering at the Athens Homeless Shelter, collecting canned goods for the needy, reading for the blind, and other philanthropic efforts. Actions of individual law students were extensive but unaccountable. Suffice it to say that the majority of students are interested in helping others and act upon that interest.

You can take pride in the academic and competitive achievements of School of Law students as detailed elsewhere in this newsletter. You also can be assured that the school has continued to attract a fine group of students, just like when you were here.

As an alumna or alumnus, your continued interest in the School of Law is valued. If you want more information about any particular student organization or if you are interested in participating in any programs next year, please let us know. You are always a part of it. Meanwhile, continued best wishes in your work. ■

Legal Career Services

The experts now indicate that the worst may be over and that we are on the road to economic recovery. Headhunters have projected growth in the legal community, unemployment has decreased, and legal employers have advertised available positions in greater numbers. Transactional law is making a comeback. Business is beginning to pick up for firms of all sizes. Are you finding that you need or will need to add an additional attorney to your staff? The Office of Legal Career Services has developed three initiatives to aid employers to hire in the next six months.

The Class of 1992 graduated in May with most of the class gainfully employed in the practice of law. Due to the recession, however, several students with outstanding academic credentials are still seeking temporary or permanent positions. In prior years, few well-credentialed students sought employment in June. This year has been an exception to every rule. Several employers have recently recognized that this summer presents an unprecedented opportunity to hire the finest new attorneys. If you or a colleague you know is seeking to hire top talent, please call (706) 542-7541. We will be happy to collect the résumés of recent graduates for your review.

Busy schedules mean that a drive to Athens to interview prospective associates and summer clerks may be difficult for some firms. To accommodate employers, the Office of Legal Career Services has instituted three University of Georgia-only programs that bring the students and graduates to you! On June 13, the First Annual C.O.B.B. Fair (Career Opportunities Beyond the Bypass) was held in Cobb County at Kennesaw State College. This fair attracted private and public sector employers from the Cobb, Gwinnett, and Cherokee county areas.

This fall, for the first time, Georgia will bring the on-campus program to Atlanta. In order to serve Atlanta area employers, the Office of Legal Career Services has planned another job fair, in Buckhead, for Saturday, Oct. 10. If traveling to Athens is difficult for your firm, please join us on Oct. 10 at the Embassy Suites Hotel in Buckhead for a great day of interviewing. Only Georgia students will participate in this first annual Buckhead/Atlanta Recruitment Fair (B.A.R.). Employers need only reserve an interview suite with the hotel and register with my office for this convenient interview program. Select from nearly 400 students from the Classes of 1993 and 1994. Specify your selection criteria, review the résumés of interested students, and select up to 20 interviewees. We do the rest. Call (706) 542-7541 for details.

Each January the University of Georgia Coastal Legal Recruitment Conference is held at the Savannah-Sheraton resort on beautiful Wilmington Island. Federal judges, prosecutors, law firms, and corporation have participated and hired from this fair. If you are in the Jacksonville-to-Charleston corridor, don't miss this event. The Sheraton will be the headquarters for the 1996 Olympic Yachting competition. The 1993 Fair will take place on Saturday, Jan. 23. Call (706) 542-7541 for details.

We look forward to a year of growth and prosperity for the Georgia legal community. The appreciation of the students for the support and assistance of dedicated alumni cannot be overstated. Thank you for your considerate support of the fine student body at the University of Georgia. ■

UGA Professors Publish New Look at Copyright Law

By Jean Cleveland

Uncertainties about the fair use of copyrighted materials at the university have led to the publication of a new book on copyright law—the first ever to examine the philosophical nature of copyright in its historical context.

L. Ray Patterson, the Pope Brock Professor of Law, and Stanley W. Lindberg, professor of English and editor of the Georgia Review, were among the members of a task force appointed by Vice President William Prokasy to develop a university fair-use policy.

“The job of the committee was to come up with guidelines for the use of copyrighted material, which were eventually passed by the University Council. But our research took us much more deeply into the subject, and the book reflects that,” said Lindberg. “Discussions in task-force meetings revealed that most of us held major misconceptions about the law. After 20 years as an editor, I thought I knew copyright, but Professor Patterson pointed out how wrong some of my assumptions were. And when I asked him questions he couldn’t answer immediately, the rest of the committee chose to let us draft the report.”

From those discussions has come The Nature of Copyright: A Law of Users’ Rights, published by the University of Georgia Press and praised by the St. Louis Journalism Review as “an outstanding contribution . . . [that] will be necessary reading in the public debate on copyright for years to come, for it refutes many of the assumptions and lays bare many of the theories that have guided copyright policy makers to date.”

Patterson is an acknowledged expert on copyright law and is frequently involved in litigation of fair-use issues. His earlier law-review articles on the subject were cited six times in the most recent major copyright decision rendered by the U.S. Supreme Court.

“Everyone knows that copyright protects publishers, and they think it protects artists. What they don’t realize is that it protects users, too,” Patterson said. “One of the aims of our book is to show people that the state constitutional purpose of copyright law is to promote the public welfare by the advancement of knowledge.”

According to Patterson, many of the misconceptions about copyright so widespread in our culture are actually derived from misinformation disseminated by publishers.

“Not all publishers are malicious,” he said. “It’s just that they act on the presumption that copyright law is property law. But although it clearly has proprietary aspects, copyright is actually more of a trade regulation.”

A prime source of bad information, Lindberg said, is the “very misleading” booklet, “Questions and Answers on Copyright for the Campus Community,” which is published by the Association of American Publishers and the National Association of College Stores, Inc. “This pamphlet represents a distorted view of the law,” according to Lindberg, “for it strongly implies that its restrictive word limits and copying ‘prohibitions’ are legally binding, which is simply not true. Indeed, there is nothing in the copyright law about the number of words or lines one is allowed to use.”

Other sources of user intimidation, according to the authors, include the extended and exaggerated copyright notices so often found in books today. Although such bloated claims and references to restrictive guidelines have little basis in law, Patterson points out, they often tend to work. Most people don’t know their rights under the law and are afraid of publishers’ threats, even though infringement actions are rarely brought against individuals.

To employ the fair-use provisions of the copyright act, Patterson and Lindberg assert, is not to abuse the rights of the author or copyright holder. Users—especially those in education—have rights, and these rights are grounded in the law.

But fair use is not something that can be boiled down to a few “do’s” and “don’t’s,” the authors say. It calls for informed users to employ common sense in weighing the purpose and nature of each use, not for the counting of words or lines.

The foreword to The Nature of Copyright was written by Robert W. Kastenmeier, a former U.S. congressman who chaired the House subcommittee primarily responsible for shepherding the 1976 Copyright Act through the House of Representatives. ■ for the federal judiciary."

"My general impression is that women are finding it somewhat easier to be considered for judicial appointments than 10 or 15 years ago," Carnes said.

Those women still must face the all-male Senate Judiciary Committee brought into the spotlight during the Clarence Thomas Supreme Court nomination hearings.

"Whatever the composition (of the committee), I felt I was treated very fairly both times," said Carnes, who also faced the committee for the sentencing commission post. "The questions concerning my positions did not depend on whether the questioner was male or female."

Carnes cites as one of the high points of her career her 12 years as an assistant United States attorney. She served in the Northern District of Georgia, including stints as criminal appellate chief for eight years and deputy chief of the criminal division for three years.

"When I was appellate chief, I handled a lot of criminal cases that involved issues on the cutting edge of criminal law and I had to argue those points. Those issues have been settled now, but it was a very challenging experience," she said.

After graduating third in her law school class, Carnes was law clerk to Lewis R. Morgan (J.D. '35), United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

"That was one of the highlights of my career. He is a wonderful, wise man and I learned a lot from him," Carnes said.

A Bryant T. Castellow Scholar at the law school, Carnes was on the editorial board of the Georgia Law Review, before graduating magna cum laude. She has served on the law school Alumni Scholarship Committee and is currently one of nine members on the law school's Board of Visitors.

Carnes served as a member of the U.S. attorney's Sub-Committee on Sentencing Guidelines from 1987 to 1990. In 1988, she received a Special Achievement Award from the U.S. attorney's office and the Director's Award from the Department of Justice.

In addition to a law degree, Carnes graduated from the university summa cum laude with a bachelor's degree in English.
