The staff of the Georgia Journal of International and Comparative Law would like to begin this seventh volume by expressing our appreciation to Dean J. Ralph Beaird who, in this his first official year as Dean of the Lumpkin School of Law, has continued to show the Journal the concern and support which we have so often depended upon in the past. Professor Gabriel Wilner, though absent from the campus this year, continued his invaluable contribution to our work. Visiting Professor Josef Rohlik has been more than generous to the Journal in his encouragement and advice.

We are pleased to present in connection with Volume Seven of the Journal a special supplement dealing exclusively with the study of international Human Rights, featuring our 1977 Law Day Address by The Honorable Cyrus Vance, Secretary of State, and a significant article by Professor Emeritus Sigmund A. Cohn. This supplement is designed to identify crucial developments in the area, highlighted by scholarly commentary, and to provide a valuable research tool for students of the subject. We feel that the supplement is most appropriate in this year of heightened concern for political, religious, and personal freedoms and the perservation of basic human rights world-wide.

The Journal is especially grateful for the counsel and friendship of Professor Dean Rusk. His ideas, inspiration, and assistance have made our plans for this special supplement a reality and have aided in enumerable ways our presentation of Volume Seven.
