DEAN POUND

Dean Emeritus Roscoe Pound of the Law School of Harvard University is America's best-known legal scholar. Dean Pound, who will be 90 years old in October, was born and reared in Nebraska. He has been at Harvard for most of the last 50 years as law professor and as dean. Since his retirement he has served as visiting professor of law at the University of California, professor of law at the University of Calcutta, India, and adviser to the ministry of justice of the Republic of China. He has headed the most important national and international legal organizations and has been awarded 17 honorary degrees. His numerous published works have been translated into many foreign languages.

SCHOOL OF LAW

One hundred years ago a prospectus was published. Its publishers were Joseph Henry Lumpkin, William H. Hull and Thomas R. R. Cobb, and it announced the intent of establishing a "Law School in connection with the University of Georgia." The School, the prospectus maintained, would be a blessing to the legal profession and the community, the current custom of preparing for the Bar by studying in the office of some lawyer being considered inadequate. "Believing that such a school is demanded," the prospectus continued, "we shall devote our energies to the effort, which we will not abandon lightly. We expect success only by deserving it. If we deserve it, we shall not fear obtaining it."
