THE EDITORS' PAGE

The work and training that went into the Georgia Law Review began in the fall of 1965. However the impetus that led to the establishment of the Law Review project came over a year earlier from the new Dean of the University of Georgia School of Law, Lindsey Cowen. He gave Law Review top priority on his list of changes on the basis that Law Review training provides an unparalleled educational experience. As the first board of editors we wholeheartedly agree with him; we are thankful for his farsightedness and his dynamic leadership of the School of Law.

But to start a Review more than a Dean's impetus is necessary. He may overcome the inertia, but it requires the efforts and talents of many other people to vitalize such a project. The support of an excellent faculty and of other friends of the Law School is indispensable, and in this support we have been more than fortunate. Without the organizational talents and drive of young Assistant Professor John Daniel Reaves, who has handled the more mundane tasks such as printers' bids and advertising, the Review might never have had such an enthusiastic start. We are also grateful for his constant insistence that all manuscripts be kept free from faculty supervision on the theory that for a Review to be a fully educational experience for the student, the entire responsibility should rest on the student's shoulders. Our further gratitude should be expressed to Assistant Dean John B. Rees, who has managed to provide the editors and editorial board with an excellent array of office equipment.

To a group of graduate editors of the Virginia Law Review who so willingly traveled to Athens during our early stages to point up our inadequacies we express our appreciation. They are: Mr. Walter Wingfield, Mr. Jackson Cook, Mr. James Paulk and Mr. G. Kimbrough Taylor. Helpful advice was also received from the active members of the Virginia Law Review.

On the Law School side, we owe our gratitude to the secretaries who typed and re-typed and re-typed manuscripts. Our first debt is to the chief Review typist, Mrs. Judy Harris. The others are: Miss Dorothy Haughey, Mrs. Regina Southerland, Miss Margaret Brown, Mrs. Elaine Fatora.

To the School of Law's Board of Visitors we are indebted for their tireless efforts in gaining enthusiastic support among alumni and friends for the Law Review project. The members of the Board of Visitors' Law Review Committee are: Mr. Robert Troutman, Mr. Omer Franklin, Jr., Mr. Robert Heard, and Mr. Robert C. Norman.

GEORGIA LAW REVIEW

Other interested contributors of their time and efforts who have given great support are: Mr. Philip Alston, Mr. Harry S. Baxter, Mr. Dan Hodgson, Mr. Henry Miller, and Mr. Frank Shackelford.

In this first issue we have been fortunate to receive articles from such eminent legal scholars as Professor Myres McDougal of Yale, Professor Charles Gregory of Virginia, and United States District Judge Frank M. Johnson, Jr., who has been active in some of the more well-known civil rights cases. Our student work is, we hope, analytical and incisive and will be a useful research tool to the practicing attorney and the courts.
