INTRODUCTORY REMARKS FOR
EDITH HOUSE LECTURE
March 15, 1990

(Melanie Sherk, president of WLSA, calls upon Dean Ellington):

Thank you, Melanie. It is a pleasure for me to join the Women Law Students' Association in welcoming you to the eighth annual lecture of the Edith House Lecture Series.

I am very proud of the hard work which went into the founding of the House Lecture series in 1983; it has achieved exactly what was envisioned: a means of gaining a heightened appreciation of women in the law. This is not just a women's lecture series; it is a distinguished lecture series that addresses issues of broad concern. Today's lecturer, and her predecessor, participate in law at the highest levels in this country and provide role models for all students -- both male and female. I view it as an important occasion for our Law School.

There is no longer a need to prove or justify or debate the role and the status of women in the law -- that is established.
It was not always so -- and that we should recall -- Edith House led the way at this Law School by becoming co-valedictorian of her class (1925) and was one of the first women to graduate from the school.
Present the Edith House Family Members:

Vivian Brooks       Lucille P. McDonald
W.T. Brooks         Pat M. Orand
Nelle P. Fleeman    Mary E. Patrick
Peggy P. Harrell    Julia P. Harrison
Julia D. Lewis

The members of WLSA have worked diligently. Judy Rudolph, Susan Wilson, Laura Watts, and Melanie Sherk are to be commended for their efforts in making this year's Edith House Lecture a success.

(After the presentation, go back to the microphone to announce that Sarajane Love will present our lecturer.)

The Ethical House Lecture
Lawyer to speak on discrimination

Legal scholar Patricia Cain will examine the challenge of arguing discrimination cases when she delivers the 1990 Edith House Lecture at the University of Georgia School of Law, Thursday, March 15.

Cain, a law professor at the University of Texas, will present "A Postmodern Feminist Critique of Equal Protection Doctrine" at 3:30 p.m. in the law school auditorium. The lecture is free and open to the public.

Society's tendency to use arbitrary categories to classify smaller groups—for example, African-Americans, Native Americans, women or homosexuals—creates special problems for lawyers arguing cases of discrimination, according to Cain.

"These categories of race, gender and sexuality are critical to modern equal protection doctrine," Cain said. "But who decides what the attributes of these classes are?"

While many social scientists argue that these categories are merely social in nature and have no essential and enduring content, judges often treat the categories as though they are real, Cain said.

If feminist lawyers rely on existing legal doctrine to fight against race and sex discrimination, she said, their arguments may endorse these artificial categories.

"Yet if we reject arguments based on categories of race, gender, or sexuality, how can we fashion a cognizable claim of discrimination?" she said.

Cain, a 1974 magna cum laude graduate of the University of Georgia Law School, received a bachelor's degree in drama from Vassar College. A professor of law at the University of Texas since 1974, she is an expert in the areas of feminist legal theory, federal income tax, wills and estates, and property.

Her recent presentations include "Feminist Jurisprudence: Grounding the Theories" at the 1989 National Conference on Women and the Law in Oakland, Calif., and "From Roe to Webster: A Legal Analysis" at the University of Texas last fall.

The Edith House Lecture, sponsored annually by the Women Law Students Association, is named for one of the first female graduates of the University of Georgia School of Law. A native of Winder, the late Miss House was co-valedictorian of the law class of 1925, the first law school class to graduate women.

Maxine:

Just a note to apprise you of the EDITH HOUSE LECTURE/Patricia Cain publicity progress on my end:

1. News release has been prepared and sent to UGA News Office for distribution week of March 5 to local media.

2. House Lecture news release scheduled to run in COLUMNS March 5 issue; preview notice of House Lecture already ran in Monday's COLUMNS.

3. House Lecture poster copy and photo sent to Tate Center Printing last week; scheduled delivery March 5 (500 posters)

4. House Lecture program copy (on disk) and Edith House photo to you February 14 for production in-house.

5. I have advised Judy Rudolph that Denise Horton, a feature writer at UGA News Office, is interested in a pre-lecture interview with Cain. Suggested Denise be invited to attend luncheon.

So far, so good, huh?

FEMINIST LEGAL SCHOLAR TO SPEAK AT LAW SCHOOL, MARCH 15

ATHENS, Ga.--Legal scholar Patricia Cain will examine the double bind in which feminist lawyers find themselves at the 1990 Edith House Lecture at the University of Georgia School of Law, Thursday, Mar. 15.

Cain, professor of law at the University of Texas, will offer "A Postmodern Feminist Critique of Equal Protection Doctrine" at 3:30 p.m. in the Law School Auditorium. The lecture is free and open to the public.

Feminist lawyers face a real dilemma, according to Cain. The problem stems from larger society's tendency to use arbitrary categories to classify smaller groups—for example, African-Americans, Native Americans, women, or homosexuals.

"These categories of race, gender, and sexuality are critical to modern equal protection doctrine," Cain says. "But, who decides what the attributes of these classes are?"

A Postmodern Feminist Critique of Equal Protection Doctrine.

By: Professor Patricia A. Cain

Brief Description:

How do you define yourself and how does society define you? Are you an African American? A Native American? A woman? A homosexual? Who decides what the attributes of these classes are? Many social scientists argue that these categories are mere social constructs, that they have no essential and enduring content. And yet these very categories of race, gender, and sexuality are crucial to modern equal protection analysis. Judges treat these categories as though they were objectively "real."

Feminist lawyers face a double bind. If we rely on existing legal doctrine to fight against race and sex discrimination, our arguments may endorse patriarchally constructed categories. Yet if we reject arguments based on categories of race, gender, or sexuality, how can we fashion a cognizable claim of discrimination? I will explore the ways in which different strands of feminist theory have grappled with this double bind.
