The John A. Sibley Lecture
for the Spring Quarter, 1980
The University of Georgia School of Law

"The New Age of Political Reform: Looking Back"

by Professor Ralph K. Winter, Jr.

The Sibley Lecturer for the spring quarter at the University of Georgia School of Law will be Ralph K. Winter, Jr. of Yale Law School.

Winter holds the William K. Townsend Chair at Yale where he has been a member of the faculty since 1962. His primary teaching fields are corporate and constitutional law. Additionally, he has written law review articles in the areas of employment discrimination, antitrust law, evidence and economic regulation.

Winter is co-author of a book with Yale Law Dean Harry Wellington entitled The Unions and the Cities.

He began teaching at Yale Law School in 1962 and received an M.A. degree there in 1968. During his eighteen-year teaching career, he has been a John Simon Guggenheim Fellow, a Senior Fellow of the Brookings Institution, and an Adjunct Scholar of the American Enterprise Institute. He was a consultant to the subcommittee on the Separation of Powers of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

For his lecture and for the article which he is preparing for the Georgia Law Review, Winter will review the proposals set forth in the 1968 book, The New Age of Political Reform written by his late colleague at Yale, Alexander Bickel. Winter will discuss the changes in methods of conducting presidential elections which Bickel predicted and which have occurred since 1968.
