

GEORGIA LAW REVIEW

Celebrating 50 Years

Founded in 1966, the Georgia Law Review has been “a forum for legal writing that challenges, questions, and analyzes the nuances of legal institutions and theories, judicial opinions, and societal norms” for 50 years. The journal has also enabled Georgia Law students serving on its board the opportunity to hone their writing and editorial skills.

In February Georgia Law Review members, past and present, attended a celebratory gala to mark this significant anniversary. U.S. Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas was in attendance and delivered the keynote address.

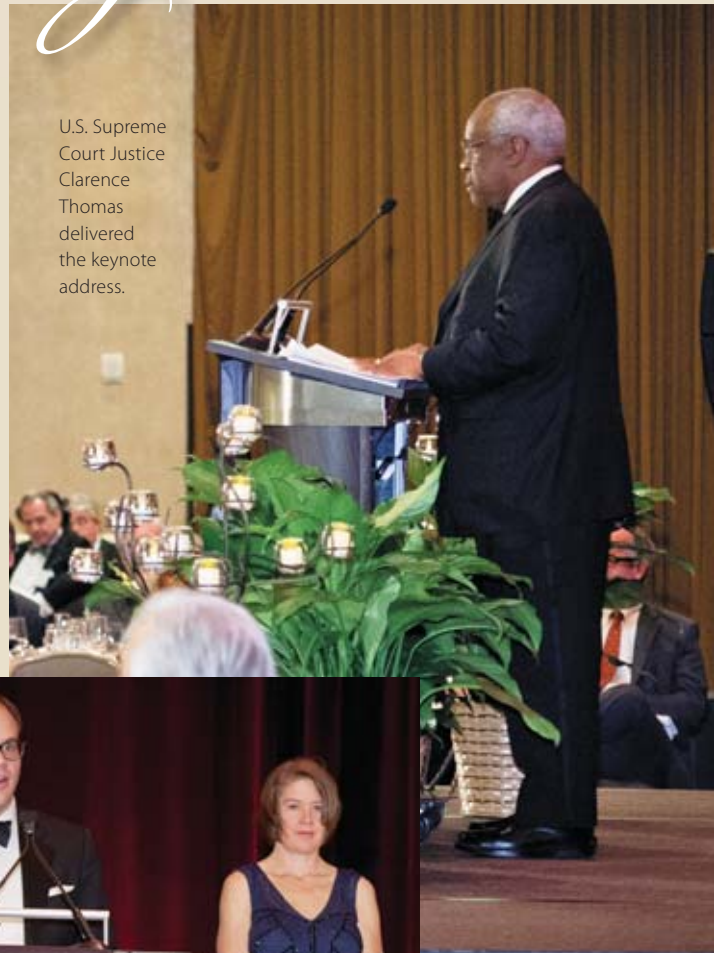

At the event were: (l. to r.) second-year student Thomas Hatchett with editorial board members for volume 50 Jacob Edwards, Troy Stram, Audrey Rogers and Dana Schwartzfeld.

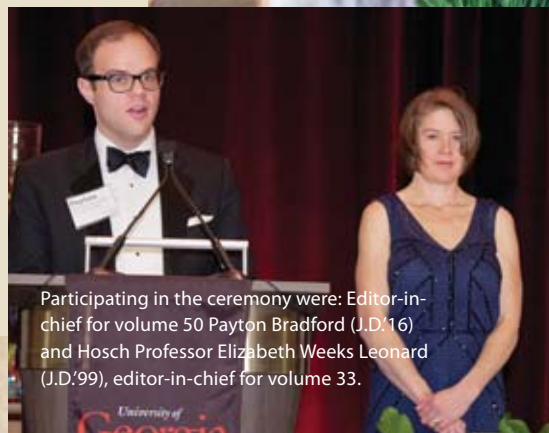

Enjoying the gala were: (l. to r.) Executive Editor for volume 7 Nick Sears (J.D.'73), Editor-in-chief for volume 7 Ken Carroll Jr. (J.D.'73), Martha Carroll, Fran Calhoun and Notes Editor of volume 6 Marc Calhoun Jr. (J.D.'72).

All photos by Dennis McDaniel.

U.S. Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas delivered the keynote address.

Participating in the ceremony were: Editor-in-chief for volume 50 Payton Bradford (J.D.'16) and Hosch Professor Elizabeth Weeks Leonard (J.D.'99), editor-in-chief for volume 33.

The Georgia Law Review 50th anniversary gala would not have been possible without the following sponsors:

Gold level – Arnall Golden Gregory, King & Spalding, Smith Gambrell & Russell and Womble Carlyle

Silver level – Kilpatrick Townsend and Maynard Cooper Gale

Bronze level – Bondurant Mixson & Elmore, Jones Day and Troutman Sanders