SOUTHERN ARCHITECTURAL REVIEW

HENTZ, ADLER & SHUTZE, ARCHITECTS ATLANTA, GA.

Potter & Schackelford, Inc., Contractors
M. Dwoskin and Sons, Inc., Decorators

The firm of Hentz, Adler and Shutze, Atlanta, Georgia, in designing the new Harold Hirsch Hall, Lumpkin School of Law, Athens, Georgia, have used to extremely good advantage the Greek Revival style. Thus the new building complements the best of the existing old buildings on the campus and strengthens the associations with the great men who attended the University in the Forties and Fifties. The exterior through the use of handmade brick escaped any period of glaring newness fitting itself into the dignity of the campus immediately. The doorways are all limestone; the rest of the trim is all white painted woodwork. The smoking room on the ground floor is paneled in pine and designed to house a famous table at which the most famous of the University's graduates have worked. The important library on the second floor, which we hope to present in detailed fashion in a later issue, is a remarkably beautiful room paneled in walnut.
