

EDITOR'S NOTE

The following special section of the Georgia Journal of International and Comparative Law contains transcripts of speeches delivered at a Colloquium held at The University of Georgia, entitled "The Role of the United Nations in the Maintenance of Peace Before and After the Year Two Thousand." When we decided to include the Colloquium in this issue, we believed that it would be a unique approach to present the following transcripts in the same format as they were delivered by the speakers.* Thus, we attempted to preserve the colloquial style of the speeches, and we tried to avoid transforming the transcripts into articles by adding footnotes. I believe that this approach has preserved the atmosphere and spirit of the Colloquium quite well.

Many thanks are due to the Colloquium participants for their assistance and cooperation with the editing process.[†] We hope that the publication of this Colloquium will contribute to a better understanding of the nature of the peacekeeping activities of the United Nations.

M. Keith Siskin
Editor in Chief

* Each participant in the Colloquium spoke in his individual capacity only, and any views or opinions expressed by the speakers were strictly their own.

[†] In addition, the editors wish to thank Kimberly D. Chapman, G. Porter Elliott, Dawn Jackson, Anantha K. Paruthipajju, and Tonnyé P. White for their assistance with the editing of the Colloquium transcripts.

