DEAN RUSK, former Secretary of State (1961-1969), is the Samuel H. Sibley Professor of International Law, School of Law, University of Georgia.

“Older distinctions between internal and international wars seem to be melting away because of the direct or indirect involvement of other nations in internal conflicts. Just as human rights are now no longer a purely internal affair, it may be that internal wars must become a matter of concern to the community of nations because they so frequently affect the possibilities of organizing a durable peace.”
