Skill Set: Learn How to Pitch

Using the elevator pitch tool is an effective way to communicate your value, needs, and work at your organization.

What is an elevator pitch?

It is a communication technique that allows you to share an idea or information with someone in a quick, informative, and interesting way. Learning how to build pitches about your work, accomplishments, and ideas will help you to engage and educate the people you need to support your goals.

How will it keep your job relevant?

The days of assuming that people understand and appreciate the importance of your work are over. In the resource competitive and student/client focused environment of our organizations, if you don’t articulate how your work contributes to the organization, people are going to assume what you are doing is unimportant. That’s not good for your library and it is not good for you professionally.

How will it develop you for your next job?

Concise communication with specific examples will make you a strong candidate during interviews and will help you be effective in a new work environment more quickly.

Tips

- Don’t think of an elevator pitch as a way to “sell” something, think of it as a communication tool.
- You can use an elevator pitch anyplace, anytime - walking to/from the parking lot, at circulation desk, at an informal work gathering, etc.
- Remember the 3C’s
  - Concise – keep it brief and focused, using clear language instead of jargon
  - Customized – address the specific interests and concerns of the person listening
  - Conversational – people don’t want to feel like they are being “pitched to”
How to Get Started
The most basic pitch explains the problem your solution solves. You can use the following format as a simple cheat sheet to help you launch your pitch when talking to someone:
“You know (describe problem/need for them), well, the library can (describe what service you provide).”
Examples:
“You know how you love to read the New York Times, well, the library has an institutional subscription you can use to create an account – can even use the phone app with it!”
“You know how the library needs more space on the first floor, well, we could strategically reclass some materials to be shelved on the second floor.”

“You know ____________, well, the library can ____________.”

Using the Message Mapping
You want to identify your potential topics you want to be able to pitch. Think about what you want to highlight or promote. Remember you can focus on a project, a product, an idea, or even yourself.

Step One: Create a Headline
The headline is the one single overarching message that you want people to know. Ask yourself, “What is the single most important thing I want my listener to know about my [product, service, idea].” Draw a circle at the top of the message and insert the headline.

Step Two: Support the headline with three key benefits
Specifically outline the two, three, or, at most, four benefits of your product. Draw three arrows from the headline to each of the key supporting messages.

Step Three: Reinforce the three benefits with stories, statistics, & examples
Add bullet points to each of the three supporting messages. You don’t have to write out the entire story or examples. Instead write a few words that will prompt you to deliver the story.

A message map is the visual display of your idea on one page. Building a message map can help you pitch anything (a product, service, company, or idea) in as little as 15 seconds. Or it can be used as a way to organize your thoughts for a longer talk, such as a 5-minute presentation at a meeting.
