As a basis for the discussion, the participants used the International Labour Organization study, Workforce Reductions in Undertakings, edited by Edward Yemin. The Georgia Journal of International and Comparative Law is pleased to publish these proceedings in the belief that publication will aid practitioners, scholars, and students of the law. The proceedings were edited by Professor Gabriel M. Wilner and by Mr. Lee C. Dilworth, Editor-in-Chief of the Georgia Journal of International and Comparative Law, who was also a participant in the Roundtable.

The problem of workers faced with plant closings and workforce reductions is as major social issue mandating the attention of policymakers at both governmental and industrial levels. This problem has been one of increasing magnitude and is the result of many factors, including economic recession, rampant inflation, technological innovation, and increased competitiveness. In response, policymakers have devised various measures to avoid or to limit such reductions. These different national approaches provide the basis of the comparative discussion which follows.
